

UC-NRLF

B 3 373 658

THE LIBRARY OF
THE UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA

BEQUEST OF

ALICE L. ... 19...

THE LIFE
OF
PHILIP MELANCTHON, COMPRISING
AN ACCOUNT OF THE MOST IMPORTANT TRANSACTIONS OF The Reformation.

BY FRANCIS AUGUSTUS COX, A. M.

Second Edition.
WITH CONSIDERABLE ALTERATIONS.

—IN NECESSARIIS UNITAS—IN DUBIIS LIBERTAS—IN OMNIBUS CARITAS.

LONDON:

PRINTED FOR GALE AND FENNER, PATERNOSTER ROW; AND OLIPHANT, WAUGH, AND INNES, EDINBURGH.

—
1817.

QRT

To OLINTHUS GREGORY, LL.D.
OF THE ROYAL MILITARY ACADEMY, WOOLWICH, THIS LIFE OF MELANCTHON IS INSCRIBED
AS A MEMORIAL OF THAT MUTUAL ESTEEM
AND AFFECTIONATE FRIENDSHIP WHICH HAVE LONG SUBSISTED BETWEEN ONE OF THE MOST USEFUL WRITERS OF THE AGE, BOTH IN SCIENTIFIC AND THEOLOGICAL DEPARTMENTS,
AND HIS HIGHLY OBLIGED
AND DEVOTED FRIEND,
FRANCIS AUGUSTUS COX.

M849967

ADVERTISEMENT
TO THE
SECOND EDITION.

STIMULATED by the hope of rendering some service to the cause of literature and of religion, the author of this work commenced his researches into the history of those remarkable times to which it refers; and if he had found no other recompense of his labors than the gratification which accompanied them and the consciousness of having at least furnished the means of acquiring useful information, he would have had no reason to regret the publication of the Life of Melancthon.

The author however owes his best acknowledgments to the public for the reception with which his work has been honored. The call for a second edition has induced him to review the former with care and to make such alterations as criticism and friendship have suggested.

Some additional information is given on what may be termed the minor biography of the Reformation, which would have been still more copious had not the author meditated a separate volume upon that subject which he may perhaps hereafter present to the public.

Hackney,

January, 1817.

PREFACE.

NOTHING is more gratifying than to invite others to participate our honourable pleasures, especially those of a mental and moral description. The lives of great and good men if related with impartiality cannot fail of being at once entertaining and instructive. Invited to watch their progress and observe their character, we may learn the most valuable lessons. We are allowed to detect, in order to shun, their errors; to trace, in order to imitate, their virtues;—to follow them into their retirements;—to become their associates and friends. From the forum of public debate and of unremitting exertion, we accompany them to the fire-side, and the closet. Divested of the insignia of office, the pomp of authority and the glory of popular applause, we see them in the undress of friendship and private life. We sit with them in the domestic circle, and hear them converse and see them act at home. Human nature is developed ;—we gain comprehensive views of men and things.

Such a scene must be improving to every well-ordered mind, and if the biographer fail of exciting interest, it can only be in consequence of having performed his task badly, from the defect of necessary documents, or from having chosen an insignificant character.

The execution of this work I submit to the judgment of the public, [not doubting that I shall meet with a due degree of justice and candour.

The requisite materials I have found by no means scanty, and whenever they were important or difficult to obtain I have spared no pains to procure them. My object has been to render MELANCTHON more fully known, that his character may be more completely understood and more justly appreciated. For these purposes SECKENDORF, DUPIN, MOSHEIM, CAMERARIUS, MELCHIOR ADAM, BAYLE, BRUCKER, and a variety of other writers have been carefully consulted, so that whatever information is communicated respecting persons or things may be deemed authentic.

Every reader must be aware that it is not an obscure or insignificant character which claims his attention in the following pages. As the intimate friend and distinguished coadjutor of Martin Luther, his name is already familiar and must be dear to every enlightened Protestant; for who can be uninterested in the lives of those illustrious heroes who first led on to the great conflict, in which the liberties of mankind, the rights of conscience, the independence of nations were contested, and by whose struggles they were secured?

In detailing the life of the celebrated MELANCTHON, I am deeply conscious of one disadvantage. Thoroughly to understand a character and to render the narrative of his life complete, who does not perceive the importance of personal knowledge? It is true, indeed, the colouring may be a little too high and glowing, yet the picture is almost sure to be truer to nature when the artist has drawn from life. It is likely to possess a certain character and expression which a mere copy will seldom exhibit. The tout ensemble will be far better preserved. But in the present case, the picture cannot be taken from life; the great original cannot sit to the artist! Though necessitated however to be in some degree a copyist, this misfortune is in part remedied by the well-drawn portrait of a very intimate friend and a learned man. I refer to the Latin life of Melancthon, by Joachim Camerarius.

I have long cherished a reverence mingled with affection for the interesting subject of these Memoirs. I have been accustomed to trace his exertions as a scholar and a Reformer with admiration. In both respects it must be admitted he was a light in a dark place; and though it is the province of an impartial biographer in furnishing a detailed view of his life and labours in connexion with other eminent men of his remarkable age, to notice errors of judgment and imbecilities of mind which are indeed incident to every human character, the reader will be presented with the view of as much excellence, associated with as little defect as is to be expected in the present world.

No one surely can mistake the purpose of this volume so much as to suppose that the author pledges himself to believe the creed or to vindicate all the opinions of its illustrious subject ; it is sufficient for him to have rescued from the concealment of a dead language the rich materials which he has incorporated into the following pages, and to raise from the long interment of three Centuries, the character and the glory of one of the brightest ornaments of religion and literature.

HACKNEY, Feb. 27, 1815.

CONTENTS.

CHAP. I.

A. D. 1497 to A. D. 1518.

The Reformation—Luther—Birth of Melancthon—His education—Early proficiency—Residence at Pforzheim, Heidelberg and Tübingen—Takes his degree—Obtains an early and remarkable celebrity—Honoured by Erasmus and Bishop Latimer—Edits Nauclerus—Renders assistance to Capnio in his contention with the monks—His public lectures and literary zeal—His removal to a Greek Professorship in the University of Wittenberg—Commencement of his friendship with Luther 1

CHAP. II.

A. D. 1518.

General Observations—Revival and purification of the Peripatetic Philosophy by Melancthon—His early labours at Wittenberg, and his increasing influence throughout Germany—Extracts from his Oration “ de Corrigen- dis Adolescentiæ Studiis” 39

CHAP. III.

A. D. 1518 to A. D. 1520.

The State of Religion—Relics—Indulgences—Tetzel—Progress of the Controversy with the Court of Rome—Melancthon's Narrative of Luther—Public Disputation at Leipsic—Its Effects—Paper war between Melancthon and Eckius—Concise but satisfactory Pamphlet and admirable Spirit of the former..... 61

CHAP. IV.

A. D. 1520.

Melancthon's marriage—His domestic character—His exemplary virtues—His boundless liberality—Account of his favourite servant John—Epitaph on his tombstone—Candour of Melancthon—His Meekness—Sympathy—Interesting Letter written to a Friend, who had sustained a painful family bereavement—His Piety—Sincerity—Wit—Memory—Temperance—Modesty—Humility—Parental conduct—His value for Time—Marriage and Settlement of his two Daughters—Character of his Sons-in-Law, George Sabinus and Caspar Peucer—Notice of Thurzo, Bishop of Breslaw 107

CHAP. V.

A. D. 1520, 1521.

The Pope's Bull against Luther—His retaliation—Diet at Worms—Luther's seizure and imprisonment at the Castle of Wartenberg—Feelings of Melancthon—Condemnation of Luther by the Sorbonne—Melancthon's Satirical Rejoinder—His publication under the feigned name of Didymus Faventinus—His Declamation on the Study of Paul—Extracts from his Loci Communes, or Theological Common Places—Transactions relative to the Abolition of Private Masses. 144

CHAP. VI.

A. D. 1522. to A. D. 1525.

The Anabaptists—Disturbances of Carlostadt—Luther's return to Wittemberg—Account of his German version of the Scriptures, with the assistance of Melancthon and others—Luther's conference with Stubner—His letter of Apology for stealing Melancthon's MS. Copy of his Commentary on the Romans—Extracts from that Commentary—Progress of the Reformation—Rise of the Sacramental Controversy—Death of Muncer—Melancthon's excursion in Germany—Death of Mosellanus—His Epitaph—Melancthon's introduction to the Landgrave of Hesse—Death of Nesenus—His Epitaph—Death of Frederic the

Wise—Translated extracts from Melancthon's Funeral Oration—His Epitaph—Luther's Marriage—Controversy with Erasmus—Melancthon's visits to Nuremberg to found an Academy—Translated extracts from his Oration at the opening of the Institution—Publications	198
---	-----

CHAP. VII.

A. D. 1526 to A. D. 1529.

John succeeds his brother Frederic in the Electorate—Changes—Diet of Spire—Melancthon's Memorial—The Landgrave of Hesse promotes the Reformation in his dominions—Melancthon's "Libellus Visitatorius"—Commissioners appointed to inspect the Reformed Churches—Second Diet of Spire—Anecdote of the Landgrave of Hesse—Remarkable Story of Gryncæus—Melancthon's visit to his Mother—Continuance of the Sacramental Controversy—Conference at Marburg—Melancthon's Commentary on the Epistle to the Colossians	263
--	-----

CHAP. VIII.

A. D. 1530.

Brief Notice of General Affairs—Appointment of the Diet of Augsburg—Translation of the AUGSBURG CONFESSION—Popish Confutation—Subsequent proceedings—Melancthon's Apology—Decree of the Diet—Deliberation of the Reformers—Striking Anecdote of Melancthon—Anecdote of the Archbishop of Mentz.....	288
--	-----

CHAP. IX.

A. D. 1531 to A. D. 1536.

Smalcald—Unfavourable circumstances announced—The Emperor retracts at Ratisbon and agrees to the suspension of all legal processes against the Protestants—Death of the Elector JOHN—Melancthon's Funeral Oration—His Epitaph—Succeeded by John Frederic—The Emperor urges on the Pope a general Council—Continuance of the Sacramental Controversy—Melancthon and Bucer confer with the Landgrave—A vain attempt at Leipsic to restore union between contending parties—FRANCIS I. URGES MELANCTHON TO REPAIR TO FRANCE—Their Correspondence—Entreaties of the Langœan family to the same purpose—Bellay goes into Germany and invites Melancthon into France—The Elector interposes to prevent the Journey—HENRY VIII. INVITES MELANCTHON INTO ENGLAND—Their Correspondence—The King of England's eagerness in dispatching Messengers to France to prevent Melancthon's continuance there if he were arrived, or otherwise to dissuade him from going—Curious original documents on the Subject—A larger Commission sent into Germany—Melancthon's Communication with Archbishop Cranmer—State of his health—Takes a Journey—Injurious reports circulated—Writes against the Anabaptists—Conferences with Bucer and Capito 344

CHAP. X.

A. D. 1537 to A. D. 1545.

A General Council proposed—Meeting at Smalcald—Melancthon writes on the Pope's Supremacy, and against the manner of appointing the Council—Communications with Francis I.—Passage from the Recess of Smalcald—Melancthon is solicited to visit Augsbourg respecting the institution of a Public Library—Letter of Cardinal Sadolet—A second Commission from Henry VIII.—Persons sent into England—Melancthon's Letter to the king—Second Letter against the Anabaptists—Another Deputation from Frankfort—Melancthon's third and fourth Letters to the king—Death of George of Saxony—Progress of the Reformation—Diet held at Haguenaw—Melancthon's dangerous illness on the way—Interesting account of Luther's visit to him—Another Diet at Worms—Referred to Ratisbon—Melancthon meets with an Accident on the Road—Conference between Select Persons—Augsbourg Decree confirmed—Several Anecdotes of Melancthon—Contentions about the Election of a Bishop at Naumburg—Account of Melancthon and Bucer's co-operation with the Archbishop of Cologne, to introduce the Reformation into his Diocese—Acrimonious Publication of some of the Clergy—Melancthon's satirical Reply—Private Afflictions—Draws up a Plan of Reform for the Elector Palatine—Engages in the

Ordination of George Prince of Anhalt—Sketch of his life—Epigram by Melancthon	384
---	-----

CHAP. XI.

A. D. 1546 to A. D. 1550.

Persecuting measures—Death of LUTHER—Melancthon's FUNERAL ORATION for him—Tributary lines—Remarks on the friendship of Luther and Melancthon—Position of Public affairs—The Emperor and the Protestants at open war—Perfidy of Maurice—Captivity of John Frederic and imprisonment of the Landgrave—Diet at Augsburg—The INTERIM—Meetings of the Wittemberg and Leipsic Divines—Melancthon's publication on indifferent things—Extracts from his reply to the Interim—Curious preface to an English translation of it—The virulent opposition of Flaccus Illyricus to Melancthon—Reply of the latter 436

CHAP. XII.

A. D. 1550, to A. D. 1557.

Articles prepared for the Council of Trent—Melancthon commences his journey thither—but returns in consequence of Maurice changing his conduct, and declaring war against the Emperor—Peace of Passau—Plague—Withdrawment of the University of Wittemberg to Torgau—Osiander—Stancarus—Private afflictions—Meeting at Naumburg respecting the renewal of the ancient Friendship subsisting between the Houses of Saxony, Brandenburg and Hesse—Transactions relative to Servetus—John Frederic's Release and Death—Death of Maurice---Controversies—Persecutions of Flacius and his Adherents—Melancthon's letters on the subject—Death of Jonas 495

CHAP. XIII.

A. D. 1557, TO A. D. 1560.

Last conference of Melancthon with the Papists at Worms—Visit to Heidelberg—Receives intelligence of his wife's death—Her epitaph—The Chronicon and other writings—Loss of friends—Melancthon's infirmities—Interesting paper assigning reasons why it is desirable to leave the world—A variety of particulars respecting his LAST ILLNESS AND DEATH—Epitaph by Theodore Beza—Ode—Conclusion 522

APPENDIX 559

(Theology of the Reformation of Melancthon)

D. Summissime in Iohanne Rex

Deniq; nort

Item historiar que exemplo sans multa continent
Pueri miror in ~~Epistola citata~~ Edicto citari Epistolam ~~ex~~ ^{ad} corinthios ¹⁰⁵, cu hoc longe aliud tradar de corintho, ac precipua coningit
q; qui non sut idem; ad copuland.

Ex Francofordia cal. Aprilis. 1539

R. M. T

admirabilissimus

Philippus Melancthon

1710

D. S. 1710

Summ. historiarum

Quare miror

Epistolam ^{ad} ~~ex~~

tradar de co

ys qui in s

By Francofort

R. M. T.

the blessings which result from it. But unfortunately, the admiration of mankind is commonly withheld from Christian achievements and lavished upon military heroes. We overlook the misery they inflict, and the wide spreading desolation that marks their course. But were it even possible to separate these images of horror from the consideration of their successes, surely the bloodless victories of truth are nobler in themselves, and accomplished by the exertion of mental and moral energies incalculably more important. On this principle the Reformation from Popery merits particular attention. Whether we consider, on the one hand, the violent and deep-rooted prejudices which were at that period universally prevalent, artfully cherished, and powerfully defended, the great and immediate danger resulting from the slightest attempt at religious innovation, and the deplorable errors which reigned by long usurpation and prescriptive authority over the minds of men;—or, on the other, the seemingly accidental causes from which the Reformation originated, the inconsiderable source from which it flowed, the slow but irresistible progress it made, and the beneficial revolution it effected in the sentiments of mankind, it is impossible not to perceive reasons for astonishment and joy. No one ought to be accused of credulity for calling it a miracle; a moral miracle it undoubtedly was. The miracles which accompanied the first propagation of Christianity and secured its establishment were, it is true, a more direct appeal to the senses, but the same mighty power that established religion in the earth, evidently interposed in this case to rescue it from perishing.

Amongst the instruments of this remarkable change the name of Martin Luther stands pre-eminent. He was not indeed the first or the only advocate of this righteous cause, but he was in many respects the greatest. Others had inveighed against Popery, exposed the errors of that pernicious system with ingenuity and boldness, and even bled for the sacred cause of God and truth. Waldus, Wickliffe, Huss and Jerome of Prague, (a) are imperishable names; but in vain did they struggle against the torrent of corruption that deluged the earth. They could oppose, in their respective times and stations, but a momentary resistance, and were swept away. Their efforts indeed produced some effects, but they were evanescent, for "darkness covered the earth, and gross darkness the people." (b) But when Luther appeared, a variety of circumstances co-operated to produce a result which human skill could neither foresee nor prevent. An attentive observer cannot fail to notice the very gradual manner in which truth was discovered to his own mind, by which means he became fitted to act the part he did, when it is probable a more full and sudden manifestation would have disqualified him for the early part of his career as a reformer. For a long time his imperfect knowledge of the great principles of Christianity and the rights of conscience operated as a check upon the impetuous ardor of his spirit, which, though afterwards essentially beneficial to the cause, would probably have impeded, if not have wholly prevented the great work of Reformation, had it been at first unrestrained by lingering prejudices and superstitions. The schisms which had divided the church about the end of the fourteenth and at the commencement of the fifteenth centuries materially diminished the popular veneration for the papal dignity. The proceedings of some of the councils in deposing and electing popes at their pleasure produced a similar effect. Above all the scandalous profligacy and venality of the court of Rome, the voluptuous lives of the ecclesiastics, their intolerable exactions, and the facility which the sale of indulgences afforded to the vilest offenders to obtain a ready pardon, prepared the minds of the people in general for those doctrines which the Reformers afterwards promulgated.

(a) Vid. Appendix I.

(b) Isa. lx. 2.

Luther possessed a vigorous and fearless mind.

He was qualified to take the lead, and to head opposition in a servile age. His mind was incessantly active; his ardor in the pursuit of knowledge and in the propagation of what he knew, inextinguishable. He did not "fight as one that beateth the air" (c) in the holy war he undertook. Having buckled on the armour he was impatient for the conflict, and rushed forward to an anticipated victory. He was one of the greatest of Christian heroes, and his faults were those of a first-rate character. Never scarcely did the hand of God form a fitter instrument to do a greater work!

It was, however, happy for Luther that he did not stand alone, but was provided with an associate in his principal labours adapted in a remarkable degree to supply his deficiencies, to correct his errors, and to regulate his impetuosity of character. Independently of the interest which must necessarily be felt in any one who was the intimate friend and coadjutor of Luther, who was with him in all his struggles and helped him through them, MELANCTHON claims a distinguished notice on his own account. In tracing the history of his life it will be obvious that although inferior in courage he equalled Luther in ardent piety, and excelled him both in personal virtues and literary attainments.

(c) 1 Cor. ix. 26.

PHILIP MELANCTHON was born in Saxony, at the small but pleasant town of BRETTEH, in the lower Palatinate of the Rhine, on the sixteenth day of February, in the year one thousand four hundred and ninety-seven. The following inscription in his father's house records the event :

DEI PIETATE NATUS EST IN HAC DOMO DOCTISSIMUS DN.
PHILIPPUS MELANCTHON, D.
XVI. FEBR. A. M. CCCC.XCVII.

The house which belonged to his parents, containing this inscription and his picture, remained standing in the market place till modern times. During the thirty years war many of the literati and inhabitants of Heidelberg took refuge within the walls of Bretten, but in 1632 it was taken by the Imperialists. In the year 1784 it contained, exclusive of the public buildings, two hundred and sixty-two dwelling houses, and upwards of two thousand inhabitants; but in 1789 it was taken, plundered, and almost exterminated by the French; and what their desolating rapacity spared, was at length destroyed under the orders of the Imperial General Ogilvi, by which act of indiscretion, however, he lost the favour of his master.

The mother of Melancthon was the daughter of John Reuter, a very respectable man, and for many years mayor of the town. Her name was Barbara, and she is represented as a truly estimable woman. His father, George Schwartzerd, (for this was the German family name,) was a native of Heidelberg, but settled at Bretten in consequence of his marriage. He filled the office of Engineer or Commissary of the Artillery, under the Palatinate princes Philip and Rupert. Distinguished not only by integrity, prudence, fidelity, and many other virtues, but by his remarkable ingenuity in the invention of all kinds of instruments, adapted either to the purposes of war, or the fashionable tournaments of the age, he attracted the attention of Maximilian, son of the Emperor Frederic, and became well known to many of the most powerful princes. (d) He died in the year 1508, in consequence of having swallowed some water from a poisoned well about four years before, when engaged in the service of his country. He is described not only as a man of the strictest morals and of undissembled piety, but so grave in his manners, as scarcely to admit even of a joke in the ordinary intercourse of life. His wife continued in a state of widowhood twelve years, when, upon the marriage of her son Philip, which gave her some offence, she again entered into the conjugal state, with a respectable inhabitant of Bretten. (e) (d) Vid. Appendix II.

(e) CAM. Vit. Mel.

The early studies of Melancthon were chiefly committed to the management of his maternal grandfather Reuter, which is to be attributed to his father's numerous engagements. The choice could not have been better made, for his grandfather was unquestionably well qualified for such an important superintendence, and, at the same time, affectionately solicitous about his youthful charge. It must be understood, that he acted in concert with his mother, and by her advice.

Melancthon was at first placed with his younger brother George, at a public school in his native town; but in consequence of a loathsome disease, at that time prevalent in Germany, having found its way into the school, he was soon removed, and put under private tuition.

Although native genius may have frequently surmounted the greatest disadvantages, it has in too many instances, been injured by an improper or defective education. Like the body that has been cramped in its growth, but which, notwithstanding, evinces its original strength of constitution by the very deformities into which it shoots, so the vigorous mind, checked or misguided at an early period of life, is prone to neglect the useful and pursue the trifling, to cherish unseemly prejudices and to take an erroneous course. Melancthon remarked of

Luther, that, "If he had been fortunate enough to have met with suitable teachers, his great capacity would have enabled him to go through all the sciences. Nor is it improbable that the milder studies of a sound philosophy, and a careful habit of elaborate composition, might have been useful in moderating the vehemence of his natural temper." (f)

Considering the age in which he lived, and the state of depression which literature in general suffered, Melancthon seems to have fallen into very good hands; and though his natural capacity was the basis of all his future eminence, much is doubtless to be attributed to the guides of his early studies. His preceptor in the Latin language was John Hungarus; a man of great merit, and, at a very advanced period of life, a faithful preacher of the word of God at Pforzheim. (g) He was charmed with the rapid proficiency of his pupil, who, like other youths of superior talent, was fond of shewing his dexterity by discussing with boys much older than himself the rules of grammar, or the elements of language which they had been taught. In these little contests he was usually victorious; but whilst he never failed to impress others with a sense of his superiority, his excellent spirit and temper compelled them to mingle esteem with admiration. At this time he had a stammering, or rather, perhaps, a hesitating mode of pronunciation, which, though never very unpleasant, and probably the effect of modest timidity, and not of any natural impediment in the organs of speech, was so effectually cured by time and care, that afterwards it became scarcely, if at all perceptible. (h)

(f) M. LUTH. Op. Præf. Tom. II.

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel.

The Academy at Pforzheim, under the immediate superintendence of George Simlerus, was highly celebrated. Simlerus was distinguished by his classical learning. He afterwards became a lawyer of considerable eminence, and a lecturer on jurisprudence at Tübingen. At Pforzheim, Melancthon was introduced to the study of the Greek language, which he prosecuted with great diligence and proportionate success. His brother George and his uncle John were his school-fellows, and they all lodged together at the house of a relation, who was sister to John Reuchlin. This elegant scholar, known to the learned by the name of CAPNIO, was a native of Pforzheim, and successively a teacher of languages at Basil and at Orleans. His mind, naturally vigorous and industriously cultivated, became a storehouse of various erudition. He was the restorer of letters in Germany, and the author of several treatises on philosophy. (i)

(h) CAM. Vit. Mel.

Reuchlin, or Capnio, took particular notice of the three lads who were inmates at his sister's and frequently questioned them about their pursuits at school. The genius of Philip could not remain long undetected by so diligent an inquirer and so zealous a friend to literature. His prompt and accurate replies, indicating the rare combination of a studious habit with an extraordinary talent, instantly won his affections,

(i) It scarcely deserves the name of Philosophy; perhaps it should rather be called mysticism, compounded as it was of the Platonic, Pythagorean and Cabalistic doctrines. He wrote treatises entitled, “De Verbo Mirifico,” and “De Arte Cabalistica.” Some have supposed him to have been the principal author of “Epistolæ Obscuro Virorum,” a work replete with the most pungent satire against the persecutors of Reuchlin, in the controversy about the restoration of Greek and Hebrew learning. Others have believed the ingenious Ulrich de Hutton, of Franconia, to have been the original writer, but that Reuchlin rendered him essential assistance in the work. In fact, it was the joint production of several literary men, of whom these two were the principal. Hutton was probably the chief writer.

Erasmus allows this performance to be witty, but severely condemns it as anonymous and defamatory, and Leo consigned it to the flames; “But after all,” says Jortin, “these Epistles of the Obscure may be considered as a piece of harmless mirth, levelled against men who were not only egregious boobies, but, which was infinitely worse, shameless calumniators and blood-thirsty persecutors.” JORTIN'S Life of Erasmus, Vol. 1. p. 93. 4to.

and led him, in some degree, to prognosticate his future proficiency. To testify his regard and to encourage him in the prosecution of his literary studies, Capnio presented Philip with several books; among the rest, an enlarged Greek Grammar and a Greek and Latin Lexicon. This was a powerful stimulus to his ardent mind, which, dissatisfied with the mere performance of his ordinary exercises, began to indulge itself in poetical composition. Although he possessed sufficient inclination, yet he could not command leisure at any subsequent period of his life to devote himself much to this fascinating art; but he wrote several epigrams, epitaphs, prologues, and, occasionally, poetical epistles to his friends; and some very excellent judges, to whom may be added even the fastidious Julius Cæsar Scaliger, have commended his verses. (k) Probably the efforts of his premature age to which we have adverted, resembled the frequent productions of the same period, by youths of ability at school. He wrote also at the early age of thirteen, a humourous piece in the form of a comedy, which he dedicated to Capnio, to testify the sense he entertained of his truly parental kindness, and engaged his school-fellows to perform it in his presence. It was upon this occasion his patron and friend gave him the name of Melancthon, a Greek term of similar signification with the German word Schwartzerd.⁽¹⁾ This method of substituting sonorous Greek appellations for their proper names, was at that period a very common practice amongst the learned. Thus Reuchlin from the German word Reuch, smoak, was changed by Hermolaus Barbarus into Capnio, a term of similar import.

(k) “Ne Melancthon quidem abhorruit ab ea laude quæ ex poëticis artibus comparatur. Tametsi nonnulli ejus populares insanis quibusdam præceptionibus è Christiana republica poëtas exigendos exclamarunt; quorum barbarissimam amentiam non verbis, neque enim nugis aut clamoribus vinci queunt; sed contrariis affectionibus doctissimus quisque damnavit. Illius igitur ingenium magnum atque ad omnia comparatum intelligemus ex iis poematis quibus solis lunæque defectiones cecinit. Nam et tempora variè describit eadem versibus luculentis; et eodem nitore præsagia statuit, cujus vestigia sequuti sunt non ignobili ingenio Germani aliquot Stigelius, Æmilius, Acontius, Vollius, Camerarius. Idem Philippus in epigrammate

Melancthon appears to have cherished a high regard for his early preceptors, and to have retained it through life. His amiable spirit never undervalued the merit of others, or forgot their jucundus atque festivus. Nam aliorum ingenia Germanorum rarò quicquam scribunt, quin jocorum aliquid agant: quò fit ut risus è vulgo non admiratio à sapientibus sequatur. Quæ tamen verterunt Græca (iis enim gens illa dedita est imprimis) non invita Minerva faciunt." SCALIG. Poët. Lib. VI. p. 798.

(1) The word Melancthon is compounded of Μέλας, black, and χθών, earth. In German, Schwartz seyn signifies to be black, and die erde, the earth.

claims upon his gratitude. In one of his writings, referring either to Hungarus or Simlerus, he says, “ My preceptor was an excellent grammarian, who took pains to make me understand the construction of every sentence, giving me thirty or forty verses at a time to construe. He would not allow me to slur any thing over, and as often as I blundered, he would correct me, but with a proper degree of moderation. Thus I learnt the grammatical part of language. He was one of the best of men. He loved me as a son, and I him as a father; and we shall soon meet, I trust, in eternal life! Yes—I was truly attached to him, although he were somewhat severe; yet severity I cannot call it, but rather fatherly correction to stimulate me to diligence.” (m)

After a residence of nearly two years at Pforzheim, Melancthon was sent by his mother and

(m) MELANCTH. Op. Tom. III. On another occasion he writes thus: “ Audivi enim adolescens duos viros præclarè eruditos, Georgium Simler et Cunradum Helvetium, alumnos Academiæ Coloniensis, quorum alter Latinos et Græcos poëtas mihi primùm interpretatus est, deduxit etiam ad philosophiam puriorem, sæpè conferens Aristotelicam lectionem quæ tunc erat in manibus ad Græcos fontes; alter Cunradus doctissimi et honestissimi viri doctoris Cæsarii auditor primùm nobis Heydelburgæ elementa doctrinæ de motibus cælestibus tradidit: quam ob causam et doctori Cæsario peculiarem gratiam et venerationem tanquam præceptoris, debere me profiteor.” MEL. Declam. Tom. I. Responsio ad Scrip. quorund. delect. à Clero Secund. Colon. Agripp.

the relation who superintended his education, to the University of Heidelberg: formerly the metropolis, now the second town, of the lower Palatinate, and the birth-place of his father. He was matriculated on the thirteenth of October, in the year 1509, the twelfth of his age. (n) The University was highly celebrated for its various professors in the different branches of learning, who were soon attracted not only by the extraordinary progress and amiable disposition of their young pupil, but by his zealous efforts to excite his fellow students to the more diligent cultivation of polite literature. Conscious of his own mental superiority, he felt no envious apprehension of their outstripping him; or, if they had, his future character renders it evident, that he would have been the first to rejoice in their success. It was impossible that the union of so much application with so much talent should fail of producing great results. He was accordingly soon looked up to as a first-rate youth, and though but a lad was employed to compose most of the public harangues and discourses of eloquence that were delivered in the University, and wrote some things even for the professors themselves. (o) He was also

(n) MEL. ADAM. vitæ Germ. Theologorum. CAM. Vit. Mel.

(o) BAILLET, des Enfans deven. celeb. par leurs Etudes ou par leurs Ecrits, Traité Historique, p. 130. MEL. ADAM. Vitæ Philos. p. 186. "Scripsit jam adolescentulus professoribus in eâ scholâ orationes, quæ publicè recitatæ sunt."

entrusted with the education of the two sons of Count Leonstein. His proficiency in the Greek was so remarkable, that even at this early age he composed Rudiments of the language which were afterwards published. (p)

During his residence at Heidelberg, Melancthon, who was so eminently formed for friendship, contracted an intimacy with several persons of merit. Among these were Wimphelingus, Sturmius, Gautherus, and Sorbillus. He was an inmate of the well-known Pallas, a man pre-eminently distinguished for his wisdom, virtue and benevolence, and for many years the brightest ornament of the academy.

Heidelberg had not the honour of educating Melancthon more than three years. He was naturally of a feeble constitution, and the situation of the place did not appear to agree with him. This circumstance, together with the severe disappointment he suffered in being refused a higher degree in the university than he had hitherto obtained, solely, as it was alleged, on account of his youth, determined him to remove to Tubingen, a town on the Neckar, in the duchy of Wurtemberg. The university was daily increasing in reputation, and he entered it in the month of September, 1512. It had been founded by Prince Eberhard I. about five and thirty years before, who had been careful to procure the most celebrated men of the time for professors in every branch of literature and theology. (q)

At Tübingen our aspiring youth attended all the different professors of classical and polite learning, devoting himself especially to mathematics, jurisprudence, logic, medicine, and theology. In medicine he studied Galen so thoroughly, that he could repeat the greatest part of his treatises; and although theology, as it was then taught, consisted in little else than scholastic subtleties, knotty questions, unintelligible jargon, and absurdities compounded of superstition and profaneness, (r) he began to be much devoted to the more sober and rational part of it. Here he first became acquainted with Oecolampadius, who was his senior by several years: and as he mentions in one of his letters, they used to read Hesiod together. But, of all the professors, Henry Bebelius, distinguished for his skill in history, John Brassicanus, John Stofflerus in the mathematical department, and Francis Stadianus, the public lecturer on Aristotle, appear to have attracted his highest esteem. He has mentioned the two latter in particular with applause and affection in his writings. Stofflerus had for many years the sole care of calculating and arranging the calendar, a task which Melancthon affirms he executed with great labour and with equal skill. "Had it not been," says he, "for his indefatigable application, we should have known nothing of the distinction of times and the changes of the months—nor of the seasons for ploughing, sowing, planting, and other agricultural pursuits, nor of a variety of other useful and ingenious arts." (s) He addresses him in the dedication or preface to his public oration on the Liberal Arts, in these terms: "I am indebted to your kindness not only for what I know, but for what I am desirous of knowing; and I am desirous of knowing whatever becomes me. How can I sufficiently testify my regard and admiration for one who, during the many years in which he has diligently investigated the abstruse parts of mathematical science, has been constantly stimulating the studious in general, and myself in particular, by every mark of kindness, to pursue an honourable renown." (t) Francis Stadianus he describes in the strongest terms: "He was a man of learning, and lived in such a manner as to deserve the affection of all the learned and the good!" (u)

(q) MELANCTH. Declam. Orat. de Eberh. Duc. Wirt.

(r) “ In theologia D. Lempum qui tum præcipuus habebatur; de quo hoc sæpe retulit, solitum cum auditoribus depingere in tabula monstrum illud, quod vocant transubstantiationis et insulstatem hominis tum quoque se miratum.” MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 329.

(s) MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. I. Eacomium Suxorum.

(t) MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. I. Orat. de Art. Lib. pref.

(u) MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. I. De Stud. Corrig.

Melancthon had not yet attained the age of seventeen when he was created Doctor in Philosophy, or Master of Arts. This took place on the twenty-fifth of January, in the year 1513, (x) when he immediately commenced a course of private tuition; but not long afterwards he became a public lecturer at Tubingen. General admiration was soon excited by the profound knowledge and elegant taste he discovered in the Latin classics. A considerable portion of time was occupied every day in delivering public lectures, which were not exclusively devoted to the learned languages, but embraced an extraordinary variety of subjects, as rhetoric, logic, ethics, mathematics and theology. At the same time he particularly directed the attention of his scholars to the classical compositions of Virgil, Terence, Cicero, Livy and the Greek writers. He may be justly regarded as the restorer of Terence, whose poetical compositions, through the ignorance of his transcribers and publishers, had hitherto appeared only in a prosaic dress. (y)

(x) MELCHIOR ADAM calls it the seventeenth year of his age; but, according to the above date, which he has given, Melancthon was not quite sixteen. M. BAILLET says he took his diploma in 1514; but I am not certain whether we are to conclude that Melchior Adam commits a mistake in the year of the world or in the year of his age.

(y) The British Museum contains a very curious old copy of Terence, as it was published previous to this period at Strasburg. The title-page is wanting. It is crowded with a variety

Melancthon, having reduced them to a proper arrangement, presented them to the public in their present form. In this labour he shewed his discrimination and taste; for Cicero eulogizes Terence both for the purity of his diction and the beauty of his compositions, representing them as the rule and standard of the language. (z)

This bright star in the literary hemisphere, the brighter for the profound darkness which surrounded it, could not fail of attracting the attention of the great men of the age. So early as the year 1515 the sagacious and learned Erasmus of Rotterdam, exclaimed in terms of rapturous admiration, "At, Deum immortalem, quam non spem de se præbet admodum etiam adolescens et pene puer, Philippus ille Melancthon, utraque literatura pene ex æquo suscipiendus! Quod inventionis acumen! Quæ sermonis puritas! Quanta reconditarum rerum memoria! Quam variæ lectio! Quam verecunda regiæque prorsus indolis festivitas!" i. e. "What hopes of marginal notes, and has several manuscript references. It is also ornamented with curious wood cuts, and the last page concludes with the following notification of the time and place where it was published: "Impressum in imperiali ac libera urbe Argentina per Joannem Grüninger. Ad illam formam ut intuenti jocundior atque intellectu facilior esset per Joannem Curtum ex Eberspach redactum. Anno à nativitate Domini, 1499, tertio idus Februarii." may we not conceive of Philip Melancthon, though as yet very young, and almost a boy, but equally to be admired for his proficiency in both languages! What quickness of invention! What purity of diction! What vastness of memory! What variety of reading! What a modesty and gracefulness of behaviour! and what a princely mind!" (a) An eulogium so remarkable, and bestowed by such a man, on a stripling of only eighteen, was surely no inconsiderable testimony to his wonderful merit.

(z) The learned reader may peruse some of his Prologues to Terence, in Appendix III.

Nor was this the only occasion on which this accomplished scholar expressed his admiration. His works abound with similar encomiums: it will be sufficient to select two or three. Writing to Oecolampadius he says, "Of Melancthon I have already the highest opinion, and cherish the most magnificent hopes: so much so, that I am persuaded Christ designs this youth to excel us all: he will totally eclipse Erasmus!"—Mosellanus having interceded with him upon occasion of some injurious reports that had been circulated respecting the remarks of Melancthon upon his paraphrase on the New Testament, and implored him not to suffer himself to be unfavourably impressed by them, Erasmus replied, "Philip Melancthon is in no need of my patronage or defence." In a letter which Erasmus addressed to him, he concludes thus, "Farewell, most learned Melancthon, use all thine energies that the splendid hopes which Germany conceives of thy genius and thy piety may not only be equalled, but exceeded." On another occasion, in a letter to Julius Pflug, the celebrated counsellor of George, duke of Saxony, he gives Melancthon this character: "He not only excels in learning and eloquence, but by a certain fatality is a general favourite. Honest and candid men are fond of him, and even his adversaries cannot hate him!" "Happy," exclaims Dr. Jortin, "is the person whom this description suits! It is not safe to attack him; the public will revenge his wrongs and take his part against you!" Seckendorf remarks, that were the various eulogies which literary men, and even religious opponents have pronounced upon Melancthon to be collected together, they would fill a very considerable volume. (b)

(a) GRYNÆI Epist. Select. Lib. I. p. 302.

To a much earlier period, probably, may be referred the oration mentioned in a very curious passage of one of Hugh Latimer's sermons, which evinces the astonishing celebrity of this youthful scholar and reformer. "Heere I have occasion to tell you a story which happened at Cambridge. Master Bilney, (or rather Saint

(b) SECKENDORF Hist. Lutheranismi, Lib. I. Sect. 16. Add. 1. ERASMI Lit. Lib. V. ep. 38. Lib. VI. ep. 1. JORTIN'S Life of Erasmus.

Bilney that suffered death for God's word sake,) the same Bilney was the instrument whereby God called me to knowledge, for I may thanke him, next to God, for that knowledge that I have in the word of God. For I was as obstinate a Papist as any was in England, insomuch that when I should be made Bachelor of Divinity, my whole oration went against Phillippe Melancthon and against his opinions. Bilney hearde mee at that time and perceived that I was zealous without knowledge: and hee came to me afterward in my study, and desired mee for God's sake to heare his confession: I did so—and to say the very truth, by his confession I learned more than before in many yeares. So from that time forward I begunne to smell the word of God, and forsooke the schoole doctors and such fooleries." (c)

The same Latimer afterwards said, in a sermon preached before Edward VI. who expected him in England, "I hear say Mr. Melancthon that great clerk, should come hither. I would wish him, and such as he is, two hundred pounds a year. The king should never want it in his coffers at the year's end."

Melancthon took upon himself the laborious task of revising the works published by Thomas Anshelmus, a noted printer at Tubingen. The greatest part of his time, not immediately devoted to his professional duties or his private studies, was bestowed in editing a ponderous folio work of Naucerus, to which a preface was prefixed by Capnio. Originally, it was, in fact, nothing but a confused heap of fables, mingled with historical facts; and Melancthon bestowed a labour upon it very disproportionate to its intrinsic merit, in arranging, correcting, purifying, and almost re-writing it. In this case we can only praise him for his industry. (d)

During his residence at Tubingen, he had an opportunity of rendering essential service to his early friend and patron Capnio, who was involved in a disagreeable contention with certain ecclesiastics. It happened thus. The divines and monks of Cologne, instigated by a Jew of the name of Pfefferkorn, who had professed Christianity, obtained an edict from the emperor to authorise them to burn all the Jewish writings as heretical, excepting the Bible. The Jews instantly implored the emperor to suspend his order till these books had been examined by a competent committee of learned men. To this very reasonable petition he consented. Capnio, who had prosecuted the study of the Hebrew language under some learned

(d) The book is entitled, “Memorabilium omnis ætatis et omnium Gentium Chronici Commentarii à Joanne Naucero J. V. Doctore Tubing. Præposito et Universitatis Cancellarie, digesti in annum M. D.”

Jews, both at Vienna and at Rome, and who had become conversant with the Cabalistic writings, was appointed by the Elector of Mentz to be an arbitrator in the controversy. Having given it as his opinion, that no other books should be destroyed but such as were found to be written expressly against Jesus Christ, the emperor approved the decision, and restored the books to the Jews. At this the monks and inquisitors of Cologne were violently exasperated and not only loaded him with invectives, but used every means to induce the court of Rome to persue him with the thunder of excommunication. At this critical juncture, Melancthon was of essential use to his early patron, and frequent conferences took place between them, both at Tubingen and at Stutgard, the place where Capnio resided. Neither the advice nor the zealous efforts of a warm friend were wanting in his defence, which, co-operating with his high literary reputation, resulted in the honourable acquittal of Capnio. This celebrated character died very poor at the age of sixty-seven. "On account of his virtue and merit," says Melancthon, "his memory ought to be cherished. He served his country with great diligence and judgment, and promoted assiduously the Hebrew language, so important to scholars. His candour was remarkable, and he was devoid of envy and malevolence. For these reasons he was much esteemed by learned men.” (e)

One of the earliest of Melancthon's productions, now extant, is an Oration on the Liberal Arts, delivered at Tubingen in the year 1517, at twenty years of age. It indicates the elegance of his mind and the variety of his reading. After a suitable introduction, he relates the classical story of the seven stringed lyre and the origin of the liberal arts. The oration proceeds with a detail of these arts and a brief recital of their origin and progress. It glows with animation as it approaches the close. “Let the example of those illustrious persons who surround me, inspire you. Be animated by the great and glorious expectations of your country, and apply the utmost vigour of your minds to what you know to be of pre-eminent importance, the attainment of sound learning and real virtue. Do not be seduced from this noble course by flattering pleasures or by evil examples. Let no dishonourable principle influence your minds: and that I call dishonourable which diverts you from the literary pursuits and from the sacred studies to which you are devoted.”

Considering the very important part Melancthon was destined to act in the Reformation, it would be pleasing, were it possible, to trace the formation of his religious principles and modes of thinking with as much exactness as we are able to detail his literary career. The history of piety is even more interesting than the history of genius. To discriminate with accuracy the different states of the mind, to ascertain the changes of feeling at successive periods of early life, to witness at once the progressive establishment of moral character and the developement of intellectual capacity, is, and ever must be, highly instructive. Melancthon was endowed with a soul formed of the finest materials, cast in the gentlest mould, and ever ready to listen with attention to reason and argument; but in proportion as the original prejudices of education had entrenched themselves in a mind delicate, discerning, and full of sensibility like his, the attempt to dispossess principles so dear to him, must have been difficult and hazardous. It is long before one, so constituted, can renounce what has been held sacred; then, not without obvious and substantial reasons. Offence is easily taken at the first and most distant appearances of what is deemed error, and, under favouring circumstances, in an unenlightened age, an extraordinary degree of superstition is the natural result. Melancthon expresses, on one occasion, the pungent sorrow which the recollection of his former zeal in the idolatrous services of the Catholic church occasioned. (f) It is easy to believe, therefore, that he must have endured many secret conflicts, many heart-rending struggles, previously to his separation from that communion. The only illustrative fact transmitted to us affords some good evidence that his convictions originated in the best manner, and that his early religious views were derived from the only pure source of instruction. Capnio having presented him with a small Bible which had been recently printed at Basil by the well-known John Frobenius, or Froben, Melancthon accustomed himself to write down upon the margin such explanatory hints and such useful illustrations of particular passages, as either occurred to his own reflections or could be collected from the different ancient writers with whose works he was conversant; a practice which at least proves the diligent attention he began to pay to the sacred volume. This Bible was his constant companion. He never failed to carry it with him wherever he went, and during the public service at church constantly held it in his hand, to direct and enliven his devotions. This practice furnished an occasion to his bigotted and no less malignant adversaries, who perceived he made use of a volume of a different size from the prayer-book, to represent him as engaged in reading even in the public church, what was very unsuitable both to the occasion and the place! No efforts were omitted to render him odious: but Envy and Persecution waged an unequal war, and were defeated. (g)

(e) Comp. MELANCTH. Declam. Vit. Reuchl. passim. BRUCKERI Hist. Crit. Philosophiæ. MAH Vit. Joan. Reuche.

(f) "Cohorresco quando cogito quomodo ipse accesserim ad statuas in Papatu." Explic. Evang. P. II. p. 592.

The spirit manifested on this occasion by these religious barbarians perfectly harmonised with the language of one of the monkish fraternity, whose preposterous ignorance and bigotry have furnished a standing joke ever since the Reformation. "A new language," says he, "has been invented, which is called Greek; guard carefully against it, it is the mother of every species of heresy. I observe in the hands of a great many people, a book written in this language, which they call the New Testament; it is a book full of thorns and serpents. With respect to Hebrew, it is certain, my dear brethren, that all who learn it are instantly converted to Judaism."!! (h)

After a residence of about six years, Melancthon removed from Tubingen to THE UNIVERSITY OF WITTEMBERG, the metropolis of the Circle of Upper Saxony. In this situation he was immediately introduced into a scene of great labour and extensive usefulness. This university was founded so recently as the year 1502,

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel.

(h) CONRAD DE HERESBACH, cited by GERNLER.

under the auspices of the Elector Frederic, who spared no pains to advance it to respectability and distinction. The licence of the Emperor Maximilian, and the bull granted by the Pope, for its establishment, are still extant. (i) The celebrity of Melancthon, seconded by the powerful recommendation of Capnio, induced the Elector to determine upon giving him employment in the university. Several letters were interchanged on the subject, and the result was, the formal appointment of Melancthon to the Greek Professorship. Upon this occasion, Capnio applied to him with prophetic accuracy the remarkable language of Jehovah to Abraham: (k) “Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father’s house, unto a land that I will shew thee and I will bless thee, and make thy name great, and thou shalt be a blessing:” adding, “this accords with the presentiment of my mind; and thus I hope it will be with thee hereafter, my Philip, my care and my comfort!” He went to Wittemberg on the twenty-fifth day of August, in the year 1518, at the age of twenty-one. (l) His name is inserted in the documents of the university with marked distinction. (m)

(i) Vid. HIST. ACAD. WITTEBERGENSIS, Edit. GOTTFRIDO SUEVO.

(k) GEN. xii. 1, 2.

(l) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. Sect. 16. ADAMI Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

The general sensation excited at Tubingen on this occasion may be imagined from the language of Simlerus. "The whole city lamented his departure. No one can conceive or estimate how much the Academy lost of distinction and of emolument when he departed." His journey was performed on horseback, by way of Nuremberg and Leipsic; and he availed himself of the opportunity of contracting a friendship with Picamerus, Mosellanus, Camicianus and other eminent characters.

(m) The following entrance is extracted from the Catalogue of Rectors in the Hist. Acad. Witteb. à Gottfr. Suevo.

RECTOR

JOHANNES STÖB aliàs GÜNGELYN de Wangen. Diac. Constantiens artium ingenuar. Magister . . . d. 1 Maii, 1518.

Inscripti

Inter inscriptos reperiuntur

Illustris Princeps Dominus Dn BARNIMUS Stetinens.

Pomeraniæ Cassubiæ Sclavorumque Dux Princeps Rugiæ, Comes Gutzkoviæ.

JOHANNES VONDER OSTHER, Canonicus Caminens.

PHILIPPUS MELANCTHON, Artium Magister Dubingens. de Pretten. Græcarum literarum Lector primus.

Ad latus hujus nominis quidam subsequentium Rectorum uti ex comparatione literarum apparet PAULUS EBERUS hæc verba adscripsit:—

Vivat omne in œvum decus unicum Academicæ hujus et Ecclesiæ ornamentum perpetuum. Sit in recordatione felici et sempiterna beata anima magni illius Melancthonis nostri: Amen.

Upon the fourth day after his arrival at Wittemberg he commenced his public duties as a Professor in the customary mode of delivering an oration, which attracted an unusual degree of applause. Luther is lavish in his commendations, and in a letter addressed to Spalatine he says that it was inconceivably learned and elegant, and excited such universal admiration, that every one forgot the comparative meanness of Melancthon's personal appearance. (n) In consequence of his settlement at Wittemberg, immense numbers crowded to the university, and his audience sometimes amounted to fifteen, and even five and twenty hundred persons. (o) He had the honour of being Luther's instructor in the Greek language. (p)

It is amusing enough to hear the terms in which M. Baillet mentions the intimacy which

(n) “Habuit Philippus orationem quarto die postquam venerat, planè eruditissimam et tersissimam, tantâ gratiâ et admiratione omnium ut jam non tibi id cogitandum sit: quâ ratione eum nobis commendes. Abstraximus citò opinionem et visionem staturæ et personæ et rem ipsam in eo gratulamur et miramur.” LUTH. Ep. Tom. I. p. 81. b.

(o) TEISSIER Eloges des Hommes Savans, Art. Melancthon. MELCHIOR ADAM says incidentally “habuit autem Melancthon sæpè auditores bis mille quingentos.” Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 360. “Son nom pénétra dans toute l'Allemagne, et il eut quelquefois jusqu'à deux mille cinq cents auditeurs.” CHAUDON et DELANDINE Nouveau Dict. Hist. Art. Melancthon.

(p) LUTH. Com. in c. 5. ep. ad Gal.

from this moment commenced between Melancthon and Luther. "Being called to Wittenberg," says he, "in the twenty-second year of his age, Melancthon fell into the hands of Luther, who abused his easy disposition, and availed himself of all those fine talents which ought to have been devoted to the service of the Catholic church!" (q)

In truth, this was an event of the utmost importance, not only in reference to these eminent individuals themselves, but on account of the influence of their ardent friendship upon the Reformation in general. The profound learning and cultivated taste of the one, the vigorous zeal, independent spirit, and dauntless heroism of the other, alike conduced to dissipate the delusions of the age. Both adopted the same general views; and each was equally solicitous of removing that veil of Egyptian darkness which overspread the face of the world: yet they were constitutionally different. The one verged to the extreme of boldness, the other to that of caution; but, like Moses and Aaron among the ancient Israelites, their different talents were admirably suited to promote the general object. Truth would undoubtedly have suffered had the one been less energetic and daring, or the other less moderate, and cultivated.

(q) BAILLET Trait. Hist. des Enfans dey. Celebres, &c. p. 133.

It would not be difficult to speculate on the ill effects likely to have resulted to the interests of true religion, if these eminent men, instead of being united in strict friendship, had cherished hostile sentiments towards each other. This would probably have been the case, had Melancthon continued a Papist, or had he promoted the views of those who appeared to "halt between two opinions."^(r) The impetuous temper and resolute firmness of Luther could endure neither opposition nor neutrality. By the collision of two contending parties a third was in reality produced, whose leading maxim was to avoid extremes, and who were ready to make every sacrifice to obtain a delusive peace or to secure personal convenience. They would have abandoned what they even esteemed sacred, in order to terminate this religious war; and, it is to be feared, would have willingly entered into negotiations with the advocates of error and superstition, upon the principle of relinquishing the conquests which Truth had already acquired, and which Conscience demanded of them never to cede. At the head of this party the learned, witty, vacillating, avaricious and artful Erasmus is unquestionably to be placed. (Unwilling to relinquish his connection with the Catholics, and enlist himself under the banners of the Reformation, he was yet too penetrating to be ignorant of the abuses of Popery, or blind to its excessive absurdities; and aware that the Reformers had reason and truth on their side, he was solicitous, especially while the victory was doubtful, of conciliating their esteem without unwarily pledging himself to act a conspicuous part in what he termed the Lutheran tragedy. In consequence of this indecision he dissatisfied both, and failed of acquiring the honours it was in the power of Popes to bestow, and the more valuable distinction which they could not give, but which the unbought affection of independent minds and holy reformers would have conferred. (s)

(r) 1 KINGS, xviii. 21.

It is obvious, that the Papists and the coadjutors of Erasmus would have been equally glad of Melancthon. His influence in the university of Wittemberg, and his literary fame, now diffused to the extremities of the empire, and swiftly circulating throughout the whole civilized world, would have invigorated the hostility of the one, or promoted the temporizing policy of the other. It would have proved a mighty bulwark of defence, which, in case of the preponderance of either party, would have been strength to the weak, and power even to the strong. Melancthon was scarcely less detested than Luther by the violent Catholics; and Erasmus, in the course of a long letter addressed to him, alludes to his having exhorted him to abandon the Reformers, though he declares he had not very strenuously urged him to it, knowing it would be labour lost, but still he could have wished he had applied himself entirely to literature. His purpose, he says, was to promote the good of both parties and dissuade from tumults, and he wished a reformation might be made without strife or contention.

(s) Vid. Appendix IV.

The removal of Melancthon, therefore, to Wittenberg, by which he was introduced to the immediate and intimate friendship of Luther, ought to be regarded as a most memorable event. Luther unbosomed his feelings to this new and invaluable associate, consulting him on all occasions, and anxiously availing himself of his superiority in literary acquirements. (l)

Whoever is accustomed to observe the movements and to admire the wisdom of a superintending Providence will mark this occurrence. He will not be disposed to attribute it to a happy casualty, but consider it as the result of a superior and wise arrangement. He will connect it with all its circumstances, and trace it to all its consequences. Accustomed to comprehensive views of things, he will not resemble the ignorant rustic that steps across the spring whence a Nile, an Euphrates, or a Ganges originates, without any emotion, and without the capacity to realize those images of grandeur and sublimity that present themselves in a similar situation to the enlightened philosopher; but he will pause, ponder, compare, and look around him. The Almighty Ruler of the world proceeds in the large system of his operations in a similar manner, in some respects, to every intelligent agent acting on a smaller scale. Does the skilful architect prepare his materials for the building which he is about to construct, and fit in each particular stone or ornament to its place with discriminating care? And is there any improbability in the belief that when the Universal Agent is about to produce an extraordinary work, he prepares, by a process adapted to the purpose, whatever materials are proper for its execution? Moral operations require moral instruments, and in the whole machinery of circumstances an intelligent and pious mind will see much to admire. Amidst the rubbish of error which had accumulated century after century till the Reformation, God determined to erect the temple of Truth, and his providence cleared an ample space, chose a variety of workmen, and reared the admirable superstructure. And as in the erection of a building there must be different kinds of labourers, all co-operating together and all essential to complete the undertaking, so it was requisite, in rearing this great edifice, to prepare and employ persons very differently constituted, but all capable of useful co-operation. In this point of light it becomes us to contemplate the preparatory course of Me-lancthon's education, the important station he filled and the celebrity he obtained at 'Tubingen, and particularly his removal thence to the scene of his future labours. He was selected by Providence for great purposes, and qualified by a suitable process for the part he was destined to act. His literary fame and his vast acquirements were not only of essential service, but were particularly needed at that precise period when they were ready for public use. Short-sighted indeed or criminally blind must he be, who does not perceive the same superintendence here as in the guidance of Joseph to Egypt, or David to the camp of Saul. If the Reformation claimed the steady efforts of true courage and inextinguishable zeal, be it remembered also, that it no less required a proportion of nice discernment, and literary skill;—if a superstition which invested a mortal with the prerogative of infallibility were to be attacked and levelled with the dust, the ignorance which, with its characteristic blindness, supported that superstition, was at the same to be dethroned and demolished;—if old abuses were to be removed, and a new order of things to be introduced and systematized, it was desirable to find not only vigour and zeal to clear away the rubbish of error, but elegance of taste to clothe unwelcome novelties with attractive beauty;—in a word, if existing circumstances called for a MARTIN LUTHER, they also demanded a PHILIP MELANCTHON!

(l) CAM. Vit. M^{el}. p. 31.

sible to express sentiments and to announce discoveries in science or religion, without instantly incurring the charge of heresy and being inevitably consigned to perpetual imprisonment or death, knowledge increased and truth lifted up her drooping head. (u) It is true, the imperfections which usually characterize first discoveries were in this instance apparent, but the clouds of prejudice and the mists of ignorance gradually melted away; objects which were blended together became distinctly perceived, and this "morning light" of scientific and religious discovery "shone more and more unto the perfect day." (x)

To trace the almost infinitely diversified causes, remote and proximate, of this mighty

(u) This consideration must be restricted to those countries or places where a degree of successful resistance had been opposed to papal domination, such as Germany and Switzerland; for, as we shall afterwards see, light was very far from being generally diffused; and even at that period Copernicus, an eminent astronomer, and native of Thorn, in Prussia, was confined to a prison by Pope Urban VIII. for daring to maintain the solar system, and the annual and diurnal motions of the earth. The celebrated Florentine Galileo, also, was twice summoned before the Inquisition, and twice sent to grace the cells of a prison for heretically maintaining the truth of the Copernican system. Copernicus was born Jan. 10, 1472, and expired in the seventieth year of his age, May 24, 1543. Galileo was born in 1564, and died at Arcetti, near Florence, in January 1642.

(x) PROV. iv. 18.

change would be an interesting, though perhaps a very difficult undertaking. It would be necessary to shew not only the effects produced by the various great events that have occurred in the moral world upon the general state and character of the particular nations whence they originated, and where they particularly influenced, or upon human character in general in the age in which they occurred; but also the manner in which they resulted from the previous state of mankind and affected succeeding times, as well as the intimate connection and reciprocal influence subsisting between them or resulting from their operation.

A writer of very considerable merit (y) remarks, that “A man who, without knowing the nature of the course of a river, should arrive on its banks, seeing it here gliding through an extensive plain, there confined within narrow vallies, in another place foaming beneath the precipice of a cataract; this man would take the first turning where it might be concealed by a projection for the origin of the river; ascending higher, a new turn, the cataract, will occasion the same illusion; at length he reaches its source, he takes the mountain from which it issues for the first cause of the river: but he will soon think that the sides of the mountains would be exhausted by so continual a torrent; he will see clouds collected, the rains, without which the dried mountain could not supply a spring. Then the clouds become the first cause; but it was the winds which brought these here, by passing over vast seas; but it was the sun who attracted the clouds from the sea; but whence arises this power of the sun? Behold him then soon entangled in the researches of speculative physics, by seeking a cause, an absolute foundation, from which he may finally deduce the explanation of so many phenomena.

(y) VILLERS on the Spirit and Influence of the Reformation by Luther, p. 7.

“ Thus the historian who inquires what was the cause which led to the reduction of the authority of the popes, to the terrible thirty years’ war, to the humiliation of the house of Austria, the establishment of a powerful opposition in the heart of the empire, the foundation of Holland as a free state, and so of other occurrences, will at first see the origin of all these events in the Reformation; and will attribute them absolutely to its influence. But urging his inquiries further, he discovers that this Reformation itself is evidently only a necessary result of other circumstances which precede it; an event of the sixteenth century, with which the fifteenth, to use the expression of Leibnitz, was pregnant; at most the cataract of the river.”

But it will be necessary to wave these considerations, which, though attractive in themselves, do not strictly comport with the nature and design of this biographical memoir. It may, however, be remarked in general, that by means of the art of printing in the fifteenth century the Latin Classics were easily multiplied, and several learned men published both the Greek and Roman writers with scholia and notes. Among the labourers in this vast field the name of Politiano stands pre-eminent. Besides the academy at Pisa, established by Lorenzo de' Medici, another and still more important institution was formed at Florence, where the Greek language was taught by learned Greeks and Italians, under his auspices and by his liberality. Men of rank, and illustrious females also devoted themselves to study; of the former, Giovanni Pico, of Mirandula, who at the age of twenty-one, had the reputation of being acquainted with twenty-two different languages; and of the latter, Cassandra Fidelis were the most remarkable. But it must not be imagined that this taste was universally diffused; for though the fragrant flowers of poesy grew in a few places, and some fruit-bearing trees were planted here and there in classic ground; the general aspect which the world presented to the eye was that of a thorny wilderness or a barren desert.

The revival of letters, and the reformation of religion reciprocally influenced and promoted each other. The reformers were convinced that ignorance had been one of the principle causes of the corruption of doctrine, and hence they were solicitous of seeing philosophy restored to its purity, and truth to her throne. The boldness with which they attacked religious error and despôtism contributed to the advancement of literature: the zeal with which some of them cultivated literature by reflecting a beam of light on biblical criticism, contributed to the cause of religion. When the Romish church reigned with unrivalled dominion in the West, she resisted the study of the oriental and other languages. She decreed the faith of others upon the sole authority of her popes, her councils, and her charters, and too tractable slaves submitted to the imposition. The attack of this system demanded a knowledge of languages, of the principles of sound criticism, and of sacred and profane antiquities. The New Testament, and the Septuagint Version of the Old, required an accurate and extensive acquaintance with Greek, the study of which was particularly promoted by MELANCTHON. The reforming spirit diffused itself beyond the reformers themselves, and many even in the bosom of the Catholic church as Erasmus, Ludovicus Vives, Faber, and Marius Nizolius, censured the scholastic method of philosophizing, inveighed against the corruptions of the age, and assiduously cultivated general literature. Besides, the zealous supporters of the Romish hierarchy finding themselves attacked by literary weapons so ably wielded were necessitated to have recourse to measures of defence, which must of course consist in the cultivation of all possible familiarity with letters, and with ecclesiastical antiquities. (But these studies were never pursued to the same extent as amongst Protestants, who gave the first impulse to improvement, and the finishing blow to the massive edifice of corruption.)

In the beginning of the sixteenth century though the scholastic philosophy began to fall into contempt, Aristotle retained a considerable degree of authority. The Platonic system having totally declined, the peripatetic philosophy became universally victorious. The Catholics zealously promoted it because of its adaptation to the defence of their system, and among the Protestants many learned men were followers of Aristotle, so far as their superior reverence to evangelical truth would permit. On this point Luther and Melancthon differed in opinion. The former who had studied the schoolmen, at first attached himself to the Nominalists, but afterwards rejected the whole system with contempt. Melancthon is also to be classed amongst the principal supporters of this party.

The controversy which had so long subsisted between these parties was marked by every species of polemic, and sometimes even of pugilistic violence. Ludovicus Vives represents himself as having been witness to disputes in which after having vented upon each other every species of abusive language the parties proceeded to blows, and this not only with their fists, but with clubs and swords, so that many have been wounded and even killed; and Camerarius states that similar disorders prevailed in the academy at Tübingen, which Melancthon could scarcely suppress. (2) Erasmus in his joking manner, alludes to these evils in one of his epistles. “We are making preparations (he writes) for a war against the Turks (A. D. 1518.) With what view soever this be undertaken we ought to pray God that it may be profitable not to a few, but to all of us in common. Should we conquer them it is to be supposed (for we shall hardly put them all to the sword) that attempts will be made to bring them over to

(2) “Atque non solum contentiones et jurgia inter dissentientes sed dimicationes etiam ac pugnae commissae fuerunt, interdum concertationibus non tantum pertinacibus verborum sed manuum quoque violentis. Hæc dissidia et Tübingensem Academiam invaserant, contubernio bonarum artium et philosophiæ studiis destinato, in duo quasi castella diviso, ex quibus de opinione sua factiones illæ acerrimè præliantes inimicitias graves exercebant. Philippus qui certam docendi disserendique rationem probaret, et Aristotelica in hoc genere primas tenere intelligeret, magnificas et splendidas et amplas alteras disputationes non amabat.” CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 23.

Christianity. Shall we then put into their hands an Occam, a Durandus, a Scotus, a Gabriel, or an Alvarus? What will they think of us (for after all they are rational creatures) when they hear of our intricate and perplexed subtleties concerning instants, formalities, quiddities and relations? What, when they observe our quibbling professors so little of a mind, that they dispute together till they turn pale with fury, call names, spit in one another's faces, and even come to blows? What, when they behold the Jabobins fighting for their Thomas, the Minorites for their most refined and seraphic doctors, and the Nominalists and Realists each defending their own jargon, and attacking that of their adversaries?"(a)

When Louis XI. king of France, published an edict against the Nominalists, in the year 1474, ordering their books to be fastened up with iron chains in the libraries. that they might not be read, and requiring the youth of the academies to reject their doctrines, their principal leaders fled into England and Germany, and attached themselves to the Reformers. (b) Luther, however, perceiving the support which the scholastic philosophy afforded to the errors of the Catholic church, and conceiving that the logical and metaphysical sentiments of Aris-

(a) ERASM. Epist. 329.

(b) BRUCKERI Hist. Crit. Philosophiæ.

tote incorporated with it, had occasioned all the celebrated disputes and divisions of previous ages, rejected both; but it is to be remarked that he rather opposed the false doctrines founded on Aristotle, through the ignorance and perversity of mankind, than the principles of philosophizing which he established. "I am persuaded," says he, "that neither Thomas, nor all the Thomists together, ever understood a single chapter of Aristotle."

At first Melancthon united with Luther in condemning Aristotle, from a conviction that his principles and modes of reasoning were injurious to genuine Christianity, but he very soon altered his opinion, and thought he might be employed as a valuable auxiliary in the propagation of truth. This circumstance has occasioned his being much misrepresented by certain writers, to whose statements, the system upon which during his whole future life he conducted the education of youth, is an ample refutation. (c)

(c) "Pour ne rien dissimuler, il faut que je dise ici que Melancthon suivit au commencement le branle que Luther lui avoit donné: il parle mal d'Aristote; mais il changea bientôt de langage et il persévéra dans la recommandation de la philosophie de ce fondateur du Lycée On peut confirmer ceci par ces paroles d'Erasmus, Epist. ad Fratres Germaniæ inferioris," p. m. 2127. "Nomen Melancthon aliquando damnavit scholas publicas? Nunc hic dicit maneat scholæ Melancthon attempted the revival of the pure peripatetic philosophy, though he agreed with Luther on the subject of the scholastic system. In several passages of his writings he utterly condemns the latter as generating dissention rather than promoting truth; and though he took Aristotle for his guide, it was only in philosophical inquiries, and so far as his principles might be connected with utility. His devout and penetrating mind always paid a superior deference to the dictates of Revelation. In his oration on Aristotle, he thus expresses himself, “I will add something concerning philosophy, and the reasons for believing that of Aristotle to be the most useful for the Church. It is agreed, I think, by all, that logic is of prime importance, because it teaches method and order, it defines fitly, divides justly, connects aptly, judges and separates monstrous associations. Those who are ignorant of this art, tear and mangle the subjects of discourse as puppies do rags. I admire the simile of Plato, who highly extols it as resembling the fire which Prometheus brought from heaven, to kindle a light in the minds of men by which they might be able to form correct

quæ bonæ sunt, vitia corrigantur.” BAYLE Dict. Hist. Art. Melancthon. Note (K). Comp. BRUCKERI Hist. Crit. Philosophiæ, Tom. IV.

ideas. But he does not furnish us with the precepts of the art, so that we cannot dispense with the logic of Aristotle. That of the Stoics is not extant, and instead of being a simple method of reasoning fit for the explanation of profound subjects, it appears to have been a complete labyrinth of intricacies, and in fact a mere corruption of the art." (d)

Melancthon was considered in the German schools in the light of a COMMON PRECEPTOR. (e). Uniting the study of the Aristotelian philosophy with ancient learning in general, the plan which he adopted was to extract out of Aristotle all that was essentially good, to illustrate it by the aids of literature and genuine criticism, and to adapt it to the principles of true religion. (f) Nor did he follow Aristotle implicitly; whatever was valuable in the writings or doctrines of the Stoics and Platonics, and whatever his own genius suggested, was incorporated into his system.

This plan was pursued in most of the German academies under the sanction both of the civil and ecclesiastical authorities, and from its first promoter was denominated the Philippic method. In all the Lutheran schools abridgements of the various branches of philosophy by Melancthon, composed in a familiar style, were constantly and for a long period taught; of this nature were his Logic, Ethics, Physics, and his Treatise on the soul. Nor did he confine his attention to a few subjects only, but with the most exemplary zeal and assiduity, reduced almost every art and science into a form and arrangement which inconceivably abbreviated the labour of the student.

(d) MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. III. Orat. de Aristotele.

(e) BRUCKERI Hist. Crit. Philosophiæ.

(f) "Eruditam philosophiam requiro, non illas cavillationes, quibus nullæ res subsunt. Ideo dixi unum quoddam philosophiæ genus eligendum esse, quod quam minimum habeat sophisticas, et justam methodum retineat; talis est Aristotelis doctrina." MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. I. de utilit. Philos.

Vitus Winshemius, a very competent judge, speaks of these publications in the highest terms of commendation, as shortening the Aristotelian road to knowledge. (g) He characterizes their author, with great propriety, as resembling the industrious bee flying through the fields of universal science in all directions, and collecting the choicest and sweetest portions from the prime productions of every writer.

On various occasions Melancthon publicly delivered discourses on the method of studying philosophy, and his opinions were so universally revered, that he acquired the highest fame and the most useful influence. The precepts of art and science had been hitherto very imper-

(g) WINSHEM. Oratio in Funere Melancthonis.

fectly taught, and with a great intermixture of truth and error. These he systematized and reduced to order; rejecting what was erroneous, explaining what was obscure, and arranging what was confused. (h)

Several learned men from Italy and Great Britain, who became tutors in the German schools, and assiduously promoted the peripatetic philosophy, materially assisted him in these laudable efforts. It is to be lamented indeed, that the learned of Italy, France, England, and Germany, did not totally discard Aristotle as a guide, and strike out a more independent plan; but we must not despise the light though it be mingled with some darkness, nor undervalue the labours of distinguished men, because they did not undertake what we deem desirable, or accomplish what is now perceived to have been practicable.

In the genuine spirit of a literary Reformer, instead of merely pursuing the course which custom had prescribed or indolence would have dictated, Melancthon applied his active mind to the discovery of the best means of inspiring a taste for literature, and of promoting the great ends of study. When he first arrived at Wittemberg nothing could exceed the miserable condition of philosophy and letters as well as of religion, so that he found an ample and unoccupied field of important labour. The liberal arts and sciences were sunk into the most wretched state, and concealed in the profoundest darkness. So completely were all men plunged into abject barbarism, that many, though they dared not venture upon open hostility, being restrained by the authority of the prince, yet secretly despised and disparaged learning, and slandered Melancthon; the printing offices did not possess any copies of the Greek writings, and the students were necessitated to write out passages as they were explained to them for their own use. (i)

(h) ADAMI Vit. Germ. Theol. p. 331.

Melancthon, with a laudable impatience, instantly applied himself to the removal of these evils. The desert which spread its vast and cheerless extent before his eyes overgrown with weeds, he was anxious by assiduous cultivation to convert into a literary paradise. In the first year of his residence at Wittemberg he read lectures to crowded auditories upon Homer, and upon the Greek text of St. Paul's epistle to Titus. Luther speaks of him in various letters to his friends in the highest terms of commendation, stating that his lectures were so extremely popular, that all the principal theologians attended him, and high and low became inspired with the love of Greek. Amongst other epithets, he calls him the most learned and most truly Grecian, Philip Melancthon. (k) “He is a mere boy and a stripling if you consider his age; but our great man and master, if you reflect on the variety of his knowledge, which extends to almost every book. He is distinguished not only for his acquaintance, but for his critical knowledge of both languages, nor is he unskilled in Hebrew learning.”

(i) WINSHEM. Vit. Mel. BRUCKERI Hist. Crit. Phil. Tom. IV.

The excessive ardour of his mind produced a considerable effect upon his constitution, and the Elector Frederic addressed an affectionate letter to him on the subject, wherein he admonishes him to be careful of his health, and not to exert himself too much, offering him the best wines his cellar could produce, and reminding him of Paul’s language to Timothy, to “use a little wine for his stomach’s sake and his frequent infirmities.” (l) “This,” he stated, “was no less obligatory than any other admonition.” (m)

(k) “Philippum Græcissimum, eruditissimum, humanissimum, habe commendatissimum.” Luth. ad. Spalatinum. “Eruditissimus et Græcanicissimus Philippus Melancthon apud nos Græca profiteur,” &c. Ad. Langum.

(l) 1 Tim. v. 23.

(m) VAN DE CORPUT Leven ende Dood van Phil. Mel. p. 7. Amsterd. 1662. WINSHEM. Oratio in Funere Melancthonis. MEL. ADAM. Vit. Philosophorum. p. 188.

Melancthon was scarcely seated in his professor's chair, when he commenced an attack upon prevailing prejudices, and announced a plan of reform. He determined that youth should study as well as frequent the university, and that they should be put in possession both of motives and means for this purpose. His zeal appears never to have diminished through the course of his long and laborious life. It was the least of all his distinctions to have acquired a great name, for he rendered essential service both to the cause of literature and religion.

A few weeks only had elapsed since his arrival at Wittemberg, when he delivered in the month of October an oration, to which some references have already been made, on reforming the studies of youth.⁽ⁿ⁾ He congratulates them on being placed under the auspices of the illustrious Frederic, and on their numerous advantages for the acquisition of learning; and while attentive to the various other departments of human knowledge, he particularly urges them to the study of the Greek writers and philosophy; "but let no one trifle in philosophizing lest he should at length totally lose sight of common sense. (Let him rather select the best things from the best authors, for the purposes of improvement both in the knowledge of nature and in morals.) The study of Greek literature is of essential importance; it in fact comprehends universal science, for their writers discuss morals in a most copious and appropriate manner. The treatise of Aristotle on this subject, the laws of Plato, and the best of their poets, may be read with the utmost advantage. Homer amongst the Greeks may be called a fountain of knowledge; Horace and Virgil hold a similar pre-eminence amongst the Romans."

(n) MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. I. It is entitled "Sermo habitus apud Juventutem Academicæ Wittebergensis de Corrigendis Adolescentiæ Studiis."

He speaks in recommendation of history as calculated to direct us in the skilful management of public and private affairs.

"But," he adds, "the manner in which you apply to sacred studies, is of the greatest importance. These, above all other pursuits, require judgment, experience, and diligence; (and remember that the perfume of divine ointments, so to speak, far surpasses the aromatics of human literature.) Under the guidance of God, the cultivation of the liberal arts will be rendered subservient to sacred objects, as Synesius intimates to Herculianus "the noblest employment of life, is to use philosophy as a guide to divine knowledge." If this should not be quite obvious to any one, let him consider that brass was sent by the King of Tyre for the temple of Solomon as well as superior metal; so it is in reference to theology which compre-hends Hebrew and Greek literature, for the Latins drink from these streams and sources, and those foreign languages are requisite to be known, lest we should appear nothing better than ciphers amongst theologians. (o) But there the accuracies and beauties of language will be seen, and the genuine sense of terms and expressions discovered with noontide evidence. Having ascertained the literal meaning of words, we shall be able to pursue the course of argument notwithstanding any frigid glosses, discordant comments, or other hindrances that may be interposed.

“ Whenever we approach the fountains of truth we shall begin to grow wise in Christ, his commandments will become obvious, and we shall be regaled by the blessed nectar of heavenly wisdom. When we have gathered the clusters amongst “the vineyards of Engedi,” the bridegroom will come “leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills,” and with the “kisses of his mouth,” and the “savour of his good ointments poured forth,” will anoint those who are conducted into the palaces of Eden. United to him we shall live and thrive, contemplating Zion and Salem in the secret silence of adoration. (p) Such is the fruit of celestial knowledge, which will always prove worthy of our supreme regard when pure and unimpaired by human subtleties.

(o) κωφὰ προσωπα literally senseless masks.

(p) The allusion is to the language of the Song of Solomon, Ch. i. 14. Ch. ii. 8. et passim.

“The great importance then of giving a new impulse and direction to your studies, and the manner in which they are likely to become conducive to your mental and moral character are sufficiently obvious. Who can help deploring the state of our immediate predecessors, who, abandoning the light of learning, plunged into Tartarean darkness, and took up with the very dregs of knowledge? And who is not affected at the lamentable state of our own times deprived by negligence of our ancient authors, and of all the advantages which would have accrued from their writings had they been preserved? You should understand, therefore, the difficulties which attend the acquisition of the most valuable knowledge; nevertheless, industry will so overcome them, that I trust you will obtain that which is of real importance with far less expense of time and trouble than is generally devoted to what is absolutely useless.

“Your tutors will undertake the labour of making proper selections for you, and separating the frivolous from the useful in conducting you to the stores of Roman and Grecian literature. Let some of your leisure hours be occupied especially with the latter, and I will use my utmost endeavours to afford you every facility. From the very first I shall be careful to alleviate the laboriousness attending the grammatical part of language, by reading portions of the best writers for illustration. I shall notice, in passing, whatever may relate to the conduct of life, or the general knowledge of obscure subjects, so that by proper application we shall be able to accomplish the circle of human learning, and it will devolve on me to stimulate your diligence. Homer is in our hands and the Greek of Paul's Epistle to Titus, and you must pay great attention to ascertain by the strain of the discourse, the divine truths intended to be revealed.

“ Here it is proper to remark, how much grammatical accuracy in language conduces to the knowledge of sacred mysteries, and what a difference appears among commentators, some of whom are versed in the Greek language, others ignorant of it; and in various cases what mistakes are the consequence. If we trifle on this subject, be assured we shall inevitably suffer for it.

“ Enter then, O ye youths, enter upon your course of wholesome instruction with this sentiment in your constant recollection, whoever determinately sets about a business has half accomplished it. Do not be afraid of becoming wise: study the Roman authors, but especially attach yourselves to those of GREECE, without the knowledge of whom the former cannot be properly understood, and whose compositions will conduce to the knowledge of general literature, and more than any others to the formation of the mind to taste and elegance. I cannot help anticipating the effect of your example, and fancying that I can see a few years hence Germany in various parts reviving in literature, the general state of morals ameliorated, and the minds of men, at present barbarously wild and barren as the desert, at length tamed, so to speak, and cultivated!

“Henceforth then you will devote yourselves to study, not only for the sake of your own personal advantage and that of posterity, but for the honour of our immortal Elector, who is by universal concurrence the best of princes, and has nothing more at heart than the promotion of literature. For myself I am resolved to try my utmost, both to accomplish the desires of the most pious of princes and the success of your studies. And with this design I solemnly devote myself, O ye illustrious princes and superintendents of this university, to your service: consecrating my youth to solid learning and not to useless or injurious pursuits, and confidently depending upon your kindness and protection.”

to attentive observers, when not only private persons but distinguished princes upbraided the despotism, the fraud, the avarice, the extortion, the licentiousness of the Popish hierarchy, and even demanded a reform of abuses by means of a general council,—yet the right of private judgment was not asserted, the supreme authority and infallibility of the Pope in religious affairs was not disputed, and the Roman Pontiff felt the utmost self-consciousness of security. The commotions which had been excited in some former ages by the Waldenses, Albigenses and Beghards, and more recently by the Bohemians, seemed to be at an end: and as in nature, the storm is frequently preceded by a peculiar stillness diffused around, when the winds are hushed into peace, and not a leaf of the forest stirs—not a wave ripples on the tranquillized surface of the lake—not a bird flutters through the air to dissolve the universal enchantment;—so the atmosphere of Rome at this time was hushed into the profoundest calm—not a breath of murmur stirred—not a tongue moved—not a voice was heard to excite alarm, and ecclesiastical authority lolled at perfect ease in the Papal chair. If the low mutterings of discontent began to roll, they were too distant to be heard, or too contemptible to be feared. If any intimation were given of the existence of rebellious feelings, they were only treated with the smile of ridicule. What mortal could storm the citadel of St. Peter, and overturn the turrets of superstition? Who dared resist the well established power of Papal domination? Where was a son of Jesse to be found, that could hope to slay the giant in his strength and glory?—

After the execrable pontificates of Alexander VI. who expired in the year 1503, and of Julius II. whose sanguinary course was arrested by the arm of death in the year 1512, Leo X. assumed the ecclesiastical sceptre. His character was in many respects different from that of his predecessors. He was of a disposition more gentle, and of a taste far more refined. Historians have celebrated him as the patron of arts, sciences, and literature. Learned men resorted to his court, were honoured by his friendship, and were employed to assist in plans for promoting knowledge which his elegant mind devised; but he was a lover of pleasure, an opponent of reform, and a crafty politician. Every means which he considered as conducive to the grandeur of the Roman See he instantly adopted, though at the same time he was dissipating its treasures by a boundless luxury.

The state of religion was inconceivably deplorable, and its very foundations were sapped by the substitution of public prayers to the Virgin, and to saints, in the place of those devotional sacrifices of the heart which are due exclusively to the eternal God, (g) The bishops and canons devoted themselves to sensuality, and even used the wealth intended for charitable purposes to support their personal grandeur and extravagance. They were oppressive to their inferiors, and servile, as might be expected, to those from whom they had any reason to anticipate emolument or patronage. All orders of the clergy, imitating their ecclesiastical superiors, who copied from the luxurious court of Leo, became utterly contemptible; and as a necessary consequence of these disorders, dissoluteness was associated with idleness, and every religious office publicly bought and sold. The discourses of those who pretended to preach, consisted of fabulous tales, reports of miracles and prodigies, scholastic subtleties, or grave assertions of the necessity of obedience to the decisions of the holy mother church, the merits of saints, the glory of the Virgin Mary, the virtue of relics, the duty of endowing churches

(g) The Popish churches resounded with such petitions as the following:

“ Maria, mater gratiæ
 Tu nos ab hoste protege
 In hora mortis suscipe,

et

Sancta Dorothea, cor mundum in me crea!

Sancta Catharina ab astu mundi transfer nos ad amœna

Paradisi! aperi januas Paradisi!”

Vid. MELANCTH. Declam. Tom. VI.

and monasteries, the flame of purgatory, the utility of indulgences and other topics equally edifying! A monk of the Franciscan order at Basil, assured his audience from the pulpit, that Scotus had rendered greater services to the church than St Paul! (r)

Luther says of the monks, "Their fasting is more easy to them than our eating is to us. To one fasting day belonged three days of devouring. Every friar to his evening collation has two quarts of beer, a quart of wine, spice cakes or bread prepared with spice and salt, the better to relish their drink. Thus went these poor fasting brethren, they grew so pale and wan that they were like the fiery angels." (s)

There existed a particular order of friars in Italy, called Fratres Ignorantiæ, that is, Brethren of Ignorance. They were obliged to take solemn oaths that they would neither know, learn, nor understand any thing at all, but answer all questions with the word Nescio. Truly, said Luther, all friars are well worthy of that title, for they only read and babble out words, but feel no concern to understand them. They say, although we understand not the words, yet the Holy Ghost understands them, and the devil flies away. This was the friars' highest argument who are enemies to all liberal arts and learning, for the Pope and the Cardinals conclude thus: "Should these brethren study and be learned, they would master us, therefore saccum per neccum, i. e. hang a bag or sack about their necks, and send them begging through cities, towns, and countries." (t)

(r) HOTTING. Hist. Eccles. Tom. IV. p. 383.

(s) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 413.

But something worse than ignorance attached to the monkish fraternity, of which two notable instances mentioned by Luther, will abundantly satisfy the reader. In the monastery at Isenach, says he, stands an image which I have seen. When a wealthy person came thither to pray to it, (it was Mary with her child,) the child turned away his face from the sinner to the mother, as if it refused to give ear to his praying, and was therefore to seek mediation and help of Mary the mother. But if the sinner gave liberally to that monastery, then the child turned to him again; and if he promised to give more, then the child shewed itself very friendly and loving, and stretched out its arms over him in the form of a cross. But this image was made hollow within, and prepared with locks, lines, and screws; and behind it stood a knave to move them, and so were the people mocked and deceived, taking it to be a miracle wrought by divine providence!

(t) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 415.

A Dutchman making his confession to a mass-priest at Rome, promised by an oath to keep secret whatever the priest should impart to him till he came into Germany, upon which the priest gave him a leg of the ass on which Christ rode into Jerusalem, very neatly bound up in a silken cloth, and said, "This is the holy relic on which the Lord Christ did corporeally sit, and with his sacred legs touched this ass's leg!" The Dutchman was wonderfully pleased, and carried the holy relic with him into Germany, and when he came upon the borders, boasted of his holy possession in the presence of four others of his comrades, at the same time shewing it to them; but each of the four having also received a leg from the priest and promised the same secrecy, they inquired with astonishment "whether that ass had five legs?"—By the way, they forgot that the latter would have been much less of a miracle than the former.

A Dutch schoolmaster in contempt of a shameless friar, who had expressed his dislike of the liberal arts and sciences, gave his school-boys this Latin for an exercise, monachus a devil, diabolus a friar. (u)

The subject of sacred relics is inexhaustible, but we shall only add a few words. Spalatine, the celebrated secretary of Frederic, Elector of Saxony, drew up a curious catalogue of sacred relics preserved in the principal church at Wittemberg. It contained the enormous number of nineteen thousand three hundred and seventy-four. Previously to the more correct ideas of religion which he received from Luther, the Elector was a great collector of these rarities. But the relics in the churches of Hall were still more curious. (x) These precious specimens of superstition are of very high antiquity. In the year 359, the Emperor Constantius caused the remains of St. Andrew and St. Luke to be removed to the temple of the Twelve Apostles at Constantinople, from which precedent the search for saints and martyrs, whose bodies were supposed to possess extraordinary virtues, became general. The wonder seems to be how a sufficient number could be procured, to serve even by piecemeal for so many ages and churches; but this apparent difficulty is solved by father John Ferand, who asserts, that "God was pleased to multiply and re-produce them for the devotion of the faithful." Instead of swelling the inventory to thousands, a specimen of a few may afford the reader some data by which to ascertain whether the probability is that they were multiplied by divine omnipotence, or by human credulity.

(u) COLLOQ. MENS. p. 315 & 326.

(x) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 221-223. Lib. III. p. 372.

- “ The rod of Moses with which he performed his miracles.
- “ A feather of the angel Gabriel.
- “ A finger of a cherub.
- “ The slippers of the antediluvian Enoch.
- “ The spoon and pap dish of the Holy Child.
- “ A lock of hair of Mary Magdalene.
- “ A tear our Lord shed over Lazarus, preserved by an angel who gave it in a phial to Mary Magdalene.
- “ One of the coals that broiled St. Lawrence.
- “ The face of a seraph with only part of the nose.
- “ The snout of a seraph, supposed to belong to the defective face.
- “ Some of the rays of the star that appeared to the magi.”

The bishop of Mentz, says Luther, (y) boasted that he had A FLAME OF THE BUSH WHICH MOSES BEHELD BURNING!

The necessity of some reform of abuses, even the more enlightened Catholics themselves admitted, but they had no conception of the extent to which it was about to be carried, and which is worthy the most attentive consideration. Man usually employs great means to accomplish insignificant purposes; but God produces the greatest effects by the smallest apparent effort. Hence there is a characteristic difference between divine and human methods of operation, which was never more remarkably conspicuous than in the history of the Reformation. Never, consequently, did any work exhibit more visible traces of a divine interposition.

(y) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 314.

When Leo X. took the Papal chair, he found the revenues of the church exhausted by the vast projects and ambitious enterprizes of his immediate predecessors, and not only was he naturally disinclined to economize, and liberal in his encouragement of the arts and learned men, but extremely desirous of aggrandizing the Medicean family, of maintaining a splendid establishment, and of contributing to the exterior magnificence of the Catholic church. Julius II. had granted indulgences to all who contributed to the building of the church of St. Peter at Rome, and under the same pretext Leo adopted a similar plan of obtaining money, "Pope Leo X.," says Sleidan, "making use of that power which his predecessors had usurped over all Christian churches, sent abroad into all kingdoms his letters and bulls, with ample promises of the full pardon of sins, and of eternal salvation to such as would purchase the same with money!"

It is obvious that the multiplication of crimes in a superstitious and dissolute age, would be proportionate to the facility of obtaining pardon. It had been a practice in the different governments of Europe, to allow the payment of a fine to the magistrate, by way of compounding for the punishment due to an offence. The avaricious and unprincipled court of Rome adopted a similar plan in religious concerns, and intent only on the augmentation of revenue it even rejoiced in the degradation of the human mind and character. The officers of the Roman chancery published a book containing the exact sum to be paid for any particular sin. A deacon guilty of murder was absolved for twenty crowns. A bishop or abbot might assassinate for three hundred livres. An ecclesiastic might violate his vows of chastity even with the most aggravating circumstances for the third part of that sum. To these and similar items, it is added, "Take notice particularly that such graces and dispensations are not granted to the poor, for not having wherewith to pay they cannot be comforted." (z)

The origin of indulgences is to be traced to a time far antecedent to the period now under review. They were resorted to in the twelfth century for the purpose of private emolument, the bishops assuming to themselves this dispensing power, whenever they wanted money for their private pleasures, or for the exigencies of the church. They soon became a source of inexhaustable opulence, and the abbots and monks who did not possess the same authority, but quite as much avarice and craft, invented the counterpart of this plan by carrying about the relics of saints in solemn procession, and permitting the infatuated multitude to touch and kiss them for certain stipulated prices.

(z) TAXA CANCELLAR ROMANÆ. This book was first printed at Rome, in 1514, and at Cologne the following year. Consult SCHELHORNII Amænit. Literar. Francof. 1725. Vol. II. 369. BAYE, Art. Banck and Tuppius.

The Roman pontiffs soon interposed to share this profitable traffic of indulgences with the bishops, and at length to appropriate it to themselves. And with strange temerity they ventured not only to publish plenary remission for all temporal penalties, but for all the punishments predicted for transgressors in a future state of existence. The first pretence to justify this proceeding, was the holy war carried on by European princes against the infidels of Palestine, but this benefit was very soon extended to less important occasions.

The monstrous doctrine thus originated was modified and embellished by Saint Thomas in the following century, and contained these propositions, “that there existed an immense treasure of merit, composed of the pious deeds and virtuous actions which the saints had performed beyond what was necessary for their own salvation, and which were therefore applicable to the benefit of others: that the guardian and dispenser of this precious treasure was the Roman pontiff, and that of consequence he was empowered to assign to such as he thought proper a portion of this inexhaustable source of merit, suitable to their respective guilt, and sufficient to deliver them from the punishment due to their crimes." (a)

In the pontificate of Leo X. Albert, Elector of Metz, and archbishop of Magdeburg, who was soon afterwards made a cardinal, (b) had the commission for dispensing indulgences in Germany, and enjoyed a considerable share of the profits. His agent in Saxony was John Tetzel, a Dominican friar, a profligate in his morals, but a man of popular eloquence, and what was still better for the purpose, of most consummate effrontery. He carried on a very extensive traffic in indulgences, in consequence of offering them to the ignorant multitude at a very low price. He boasted that "he had saved more souls from hell by his indulgences, than St. Peter had converted to Christianity by his preaching." He affirmed, if any man purchased them, his soul may rest secure respecting its salvation—that the souls purchased, as soon as the money tinkles in the chest, escape and ascend to heaven—and that the cross erected by the preachers of indulgences, was as efficacious as the cross of Christ itself.—The usual form of absolution by Tetzel, was as follows, "May our Lord Jesus Christ have mercy upon thee, and absolve thee by the merits of his most holy passion. And I, by his authority, that of his blessed apostles Peter and Paul and of the most holy Pope, granted and committed to me in these parts, do absolve thee, first from all ecclesiastical censures, in whatever manner they have been incurred, and then from all thy sins, transgressions and excesses, how enormous soever they may be, even from such as are reserved for the cognizance of the Holy See; and as far as the keys of the holy church extend, I remit to thee all punishment which thou deservest in purgatory on their account, and I restore thee to the holy sacraments of the church, to the unity of the faithful and to that innocence and purity which thou didst possess at baptism; so that when thou diest the gates of punishment shall be shut, and the gates of the paradise of delights shall be opened, and if thou shalt not die at present, this grace shall remain in full force when thou art at the point of death. In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.”

(a) MOSHEIM. Eccles. Hist. Vol. III. p. 86, 8vo.

(b) DUPIN'S Eccles. Hist. B. II. Ch. 1.

The audacious Tetzal was particularly successful in his impious traffic in the neighbourhood of Wittemberg, a circumstance which roused the righteous spirit of Luther to a determined opposition. He declaimed both publicly and privately against the vices of the monks who published indulgences, and pointed out to the people from the pulpit, the danger of relying on any other means of salvation than those which God himself had appointed in his word. Luther was at that time about thirty-four years of age, and a professor of theology and philosophy in the University of Wittemberg. On the thirtieth of September, 1517, he maintained publicly at Wittemberg ninety-five propositions against indulgences, by which he opened the long and glorious campaign which eventually secured the rights of conscience, and established the cause of protestantism.

These propositions which were affixed to the church adjoining the castle of Wittemberg, were much welcomed, and obtained a wide and rapid circulation in Germany. The Augustinians, particularly the prior and sub-prior of the monastery, endeavoured to dissuade Luther from thus exposing himself and his order to danger, but nothing could extinguish or abate his zeal. Tetzel soon afterwards published two theses against the Reformer at Frankfort, the former consisting of a hundred and six propositions, the latter of fifty, but all deduced from one general principle, as liberal and as enlightened as a Catholic commissioner of indulgences might be expected to assume, namely, the Pope's infallibility. As a further incontestible proof of victory over his opponent, he committed his writings to the flames. The students of the University at Wittemberg instantly resented the indignity, very much to the dissatisfaction of Luther and totally without the knowledge of the elector, senate, or rector, by treating Tetzels propositions in a similar manner. The controversy, however, was for a long period entirely of a private nature, and Luther himself relinquished his prejudices in favour of the hierarchy slowly and reluctantly. His letters to the Pope and the bishops were expressed in respectful, and even in submissive terms, for no one was less aware than himself of the great work he was employed by Providence to accomplish.

Some of his Augustinian brethren differed from Luther respecting several of his doctrines, which determined him to embrace the favourable opportunity of an annual meeting of the order at Heidelberg, in the summer of 1518, to publish and publicly defend his sentiments on justification, faith, good works, and other theological topics. The effect produced by this discussion was considerable, especially upon the minds of two persons afterwards distinguished in the annals of the Reformation, Martin Bucer and John Brentius.

In the course of the same year three powerful antagonists arose, Silvester, Prierio, master of the Apostolic palace at Rome, James Hoog-straat, an inquisitor of Louvain, and John Eckius, professor of divinity, and vice-chancellor at Ingolstadt. In his controversies with these dignified ecclesiastics, he displayed the most intrepid firmness of character, and an increasing knowledge of the truth. In reply to Prierio's extravagant representations of the Pope's power and of his superiority to a general council, he exclaims, "If such are the sentiments entertained at Rome, happy are they who have separated from the church and are gone out from the midst of that Babylon! Cursed are they who hold communion with her! If the Pope and cardinals do not check this mouth of Satan and compel him to recant, I solemnly declare before them that I dissent from the Romish church, and renounce her with the Pope and cardinals as the abomination of the holy place."

Leo. X. reclining upon the lap of sensuality and indolence, cheered by the beams of prosperity, and lulled by the echoes of parasitical adulation into luxurious repose, took no notice of the progress of opinion in Germany. He expected that the contentions which had arisen would cease of themselves, and like a few bubbles on the surface of a stream produced by some temporary and slight agitation of the waters would gradually, and without any interference, disappear. When Prierio referred to the heresies of Luther, he replied with the utmost indifference, Che fra Martino aveva un bellissimo ingegno, et che coteste erano invidie fratesche. "Martin is a man of talents, but these are only the squabbles of monks." The moment however the innumerable reports which he heard of the fatal divisions of Germany, and especially a letter from the Emperor Maximilian I. on the subject, convinced him of his mistake, he became infuriated, and acted with a precipitancy no less conducive than his previous indifference to the advantage of the reformed cause. He summoned Luther to appear before him at Rome within sixty days, to answer for his heresy in the presence of select judges, of whom Prierio was nominated as one.

Frederic, justly surnamed the wise, adopting the only measure that could have successfully averted the impending danger represented to the pontiff that Luther's cause belonged exclusively to the jurisdiction of a German tribunal, and ought to be decided by the ecclesiastical laws of the empire. This induced the Pope to refer the case to Cardinal Cajetan, a Dominican, and his legate at that time at the diet of Augsburg. In a letter dated the eleventh of October, addressed to Melancthon from this place, which evinces at once the ardour of his friendship and the peculiarity of his situation, Luther thus expresses himself: "There is nothing, my dear

Philip, new or remarkable here, unless it be that the whole city is full of the rumour of my name, and every one is desirous of seeing this new Erostratus, the incendiary. Persevere manfully in what you are doing for the right instruction of youth; for my part I am ready, if such be the will of God, to suffer any thing for you and for them. I would rather die, and lose for ever, what would indeed be a most painful privation, your delightful society, than recant any part of the truth I have spoken, or furnish those with an occasion of disparaging the most important studies, who are both the silliest and the bitterest enemies of sound learning. Italy is plunged into the profoundest Egyptian darkness, all are ignorant of Christ and the things that are Christ's. Yet these are the lords and masters of our faith and morals! Thus the anger of God is evinced in the accomplishment of that prediction; 'I will give children to be their princes, and women shall rule over them.' Farewell, my dear Philip, and pray fervently that the divine displeasure may be averted." (c)

Luther held three different conferences with the cardinal in the month of October, but to no purpose: after which, Charles Miltitz, a Saxon knight belonging to the court of Leo, and well qualified for such a commission by prudence and sagacity, was sent to supersede Cajetan. (d) At his first conference in the year 1519, at Altenburg, he succeeded so far as to persuade Luther to write a submissive letter to Rome, and after two other interviews great expectations were entertained of a speedy and complete reconciliation. Happily the inconsiderate violence of the Papal advocates defeated these hopes, and stimulated Luther and his followers to still greater diligence in the investigation of truth, and to increased activity in the propagation of it.

The origin and early progress of this extraordinary controversy, together with the motives which influenced the great heresiarch of the sixteenth century, are so admirably stated by Melancthon in his preface to the second volume of Luther's works, that the substance of it cannot with propriety be omitted in this narrative.

“ THE REVEREND MARTIN LUTHER gave us reason to hope, that in the preface to this part of his writings, he would furnish a narrative of his own life, and of the occasions of those contests in which he was engaged : and he would have done it, if, before this volume was printed he had not been called from this mortal life to the eternal society of God and the heavenly church. A clear exposition of his private life would have been peculiarly useful, for it abounded with profitable examples for the confirmation of the pious, and the admonition of posterity. It would also have refuted the calumnies of those who insinuate, that he was excited by princes or others to undermine the dignity of bishops, or that he was animated through the expectation of private gain to break the bonds of monastic servitude.

(d) For the double purpose of conciliating the Elector of Saxony, and avoiding the humiliating appearance of sending a messenger expressly to treat with Luther, the Pope sent the golden or consecrated Rose to Frederic, by Miltitz, which was an annual present to some distinguished favourite of the court of Rome. It was received, however, with coldness, and even contempt.

“ The parents of Martin Luther originally lived in the town of Eisleben, where Martin was born, and afterwards removed to Mansfeldt, in which place his father became a magistrate and obtained the highest reputation for his integrity. His mother was remarkable for every virtue, and especially for the fear of God and a devotional spirit. They were peculiarly diligent in their daily instructions to educate their son in the knowledge and fear of God, and in a proper sense of every duty. Luther was placed under the tuition of a pious tutor at the school of Eisleben, and at the age of fourteen was removed to Magdeburg, along with John Reineck, who afterwards rose to considerable distinction, and with whom he formed a lasting friendship. In the course of a year he was sent to the school of Eisenach, where he applied to grammatical studies with the utmost diligence. He far surpassed his school-fellows in talent, especially in eloquence and copiousness of language, both in prose and poetical compositions. Captivated with the love of literature he panted for academical instruction, and if he had met with suitable teachers, his capacity would have enabled him to go through all the sciences; nor is it improbable that the milder studies of a sound philosophy and a careful habit of elaborate composition, might have been useful in moderating the vehemence of his natural temper. But at Erfurt he was introduced to the thorny logic of the age, which his penetrating genius soon completely understood. Eager for knowledge he was not satisfied with this, but hastened to read Cicero, Virgil, Livy, and most of the Roman writers; whom he studied not as boys do for the sake of the words, but for instruction. He entered into the meaning and spirit of the authors, and as his memory was tenacious, almost every thing he read was ready for use. Thus, even in his early youth he excited the admiration of the whole university.

“ Having taken the degree of master of arts at the age of twenty, his relations urged him to embrace the profession of the law, thinking that his genius and eloquence might be employed advantageously to the state, but he very soon disappointed their wishes by entering the Augustinian monastery at Erfurt. There he not only pursued ecclesiastical studies with the closest attention, but submitted to the severest discipline, and far surpassed others in the various exercises of reading, disputation, fasting, and prayer. As he was neither small in person nor feeble in constitution, I have been astonished at the small quantities of food he required, for I have known him when in perfect health, neither eat nor drink four days successively, and for a considerable length of time subsist on a slight allowance of bread and a herring day after day.

“ The occasion of his commencing that course of life, which he considered most suitable to piety and sacred learning, was this, as he related it himself, and as many know. When deeply meditating on the wonderful instances of divine wrath and judgment, he was frequently so alarmed, that he was ready to die with terror. I saw him once wrought up to such a pitch of feeling in the course of an argument on some doctrinal point, that he threw himself on a bed in a neighbour’s chamber, and amidst the most fervent supplications, frequently exclaimed, ‘ he hath concluded all under sin, that he might have mercy upon all.’

“ It was not poverty, therefore, but religion

which induced him to seek a monastic life, in which though his proficiency in scholastic learning, and his skill in the inextricable labyrinths of disputation were remarkable, yet as he was rather in quest of solid improvement than of fame, he regarded these pursuits as only ornamental and subordinate. He eagerly resorted to the fountains of heavenly knowledge, that is, the writings of the prophets and apostles; that he might ascertain the will of God and have his faith established upon the firmest evidence. To this he was the more disposed, in consequence of those anxieties which preyed upon his mind.

“ He used to relate that an elderly priest in the monastery at Erfurt, to whom he explained his feelings, consoled him by discoursing on the nature of faith, and directing his attention to the article in the creed, ‘ I believe in the remission of sins.’ This he interpreted not merely as implying a general belief, for such a faith even devils possess, or a conviction that some persons of peculiar excellence as David or Peter are pardoned, but that it was the divine command that each individual should personally appropriate the doctrine. This interpretation he confirmed by a reference to St. Bernard, and to the language of St. Paul, ‘ We are justified by faith.’ Luther was thus led to pay greater attention to the doctrine of justification by faith, so much inculcated by Paul; and by the study of the different passages on this subject in the writings of the prophets and apostles, accompanied by daily prayer, he acquired increasing light.

“ At that period he began to read the works of Augustine, where, particularly in his commentary on the Psalms and his book concerning the Spirit and the Letter, he found many decisive passages which confirmed his idea of faith and afforded him much consolation. Nor did he altogether relinquish the Sententiarum. He was studious of Occam, Gerson, and others, and some of their writings he could almost repeat by heart, but Augustine was his favourite author.

“ Staupitz, who was anxious to promote theological studies in the recent academical establishment at Wittenberg, recommended Luther to a professorship in 1508, in the twenty-sixth year of his age. His genius was soon noticed in the daily exercises, especially by Martin Mellerstadius, who plainly predicted the mighty change he was likely hereafter to accomplish in the current doctrine of the schools.

“ Here he expounded the logic and physics of Aristotle, but continued to pursue his theological studies. Some time afterwards he went to Rome to settle a dispute with the monks, and upon his return the degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him at the expence of the Elector Frederic, who had heard him preach and admired the force of his genius, his nervous language, and the excellent matter of his discourses.

“ Afterwards he expounded the Psalms and the epistle to the Romans in such a luminous manner, that truth seemed to arise with new splendour after a long and cloudy night. He pointed out the distinction between the law and the gospel, he refuted the Pharisaical error at that time inculcated both in the schools and the pulpit, that men may merit the remission of sin by their own works and become righteous before God. Thus he directed the minds of men to Jesus Christ, and like John the Baptist, pointed to the Lamb of God who taketh away the sins of the world.

“ This revival of important truth procured him a very extensive authority, especially as his conduct corresponded with his instructions, and these proceeded not merely from the lip, but from the heart. This purity of life produced a great effect upon the minds of his hearers, and the old proverb was verified σχεδον, ὡς εἰπῆν κυριότητα την εχει πειν το ἱθος. ‘Virtue makes the speech persuasive.’ Wherefore many worthy men influenced by the excellence of his doctrine and the sanctity of his character, were afterwards induced to comply with some of the changes which he introduced in certain established ceremonies.

“ Not that Luther at that time meditated an innovation upon the customary observances, or broached any alarming opinions, but he was illustrating more and more the doctrines so essential to all, of repentance, the remission of sins, faith, and salvation by the cross of Christ. Every pious mind was charmed with these lovely truths, and the learned were pleased to see Christ, the prophets and apostles, brought as it were, out of darkness, mourning and imprisonment, and the differences between the law and the gospel, between philosophy and evangelical doctrine established, nothing of which was to be discerned in Thomas Aquinas, Scotus, and other scholastics. Add to this, the study of the Greek and Latin languages was promoted by the writings of Erasmus, and many persons of cultivated minds began to despise the barbarism of the schools. Luther himself studied Greek and Hebrew, that he might enjoy access to the fountains of sacred wisdom.

“ Such was the course which Luther was diligently pursuing at the moment when the impudent Dominican Tetzels published his prostitute indulgences in these parts; and so irritated was Luther by Tetzels impious discourses, and so inflamed with the love of pure religion, that he issued those propositions concerning indulgences which are inserted in his works. These he posted up in Wittemberg on the day of the feast of All Saints, in the year 1517. Tetzal, hoping to ingratiate himself into the favour of the Roman pontiff, immediately convoked his monks to assist him in writing against Luther. But this did not satisfy him. He thundered against Luther as a heretic, and publicly committed his propositions to the flames, threatening a similar fate to their author. This conduct compelled Luther to discuss the subjects of difference at greater length, in support of the Truth.

“ In this manner the great controversy commenced, when Luther did not in the least suspect or dream of the change about to be accomplished, nor indeed of even rooting out indulgences. It is therefore calumnious in those who say that he only made use of this affair as a plausible pretext to subvert the establishment, and to introduce himself and his friends into power. So far from this, the Elector Frederic in particular beheld these contentions with sorrow, and acted with extreme caution. Frederic was distinguished above all his contemporary princes as a lover of peace, neither stimulating nor even applauding Luther, and frequently expressing his apprehensions of future discords. But he was a wise man, by no means disposed to follow the advice of those who are for crushing every innovation in the bud, but rather regarding the admonitions of heaven, to listen to the gospel, and not resist the truth. He read the word of God for himself, and submitted to its authority. I know, too, that he often asked wise and good men to give their opinion; and particularly at Cologne, at the time of the coronation of Charles V. he affectionately urged Erasmus to speak freely on the subject of Luther and the existing controversies. To which Erasmus replied, ‘Luther is right in his sentiments, but he wants more mildness.’ Frederic took occasion afterwards to exhort him to moderate the asperity of his style.

“Luther promised Cardinal Cajetan to be silent, if silence were also imposed upon his adversaries; from which it is evident that he was at that time solicitous of peace, and not of contention: but he was provoked into disputation by illiterate writers, who obliged him to publish on the sacraments, on the distinction between divine and human laws, on vows, and other subjects. Eckius, for the purpose of rendering him hateful to the hierarchy, moved the question respecting the supremacy of the Roman see.

“Human policy detests change and innovation; and it must be confessed that, in the present unhappy state of mankind, there will always be a mixture of good and evil in the very best of causes: but in the church the command of God is paramount to all human authority. ‘This,’ says the eternal Father, ‘is my beloved SON, HEAR YE HIM;’ and he denounces eternal vengeance against those who impiously endeavour to abolish any part of revealed truth. Luther, therefore, was engaged in a work both of piety and necessity, especially as a teacher in the church of God, when he opposed pernicious errors. If innovation be odious, if the prevalence of discord be unpleasant and we cannot witness it without grief, be it remembered, the blame attaches to the promulgators and abettors of error.

“ I state this not merely for the sake of defending Luther and his adherents, but that pious people now, and in future ages, may perceive what is, and always will be, the ruling principle in the true church of God; and how God, by the word of the gospel, selects his eternal church from the great and corrupt mass of sinners, amongst whom his word shines as a light in a dark place. Thus, in the time of the prevalence of Pharisaical impiety, Zacharias, Elisabeth, Mary, and many others, preserved the purity of truth; and previous to that age there were many who saw, with greater or less degrees of clearness, the genuine gospel, and worshipped the true God. Such an one was that aged priest I have mentioned who encouraged Luther amidst his conscientious convictions and struggles, and was in some respects his teacher in the faith. Let us then join in the fervent supplication of Isaiah for his hearers, ‘ Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.’^(c) This statement will tend to show that base superstitions cannot last for ever, and will explain the causes of religious innovation.

“ No private ambition induced Luther to undertake this cause at first ; and though he was naturally ardent and passionate, yet he was always mindful of his peculiar department ; and, discriminating wisely between the office of a magistrate who wields the sword to govern the multitude, and that of a Christian preacher who is to instruct the church of God, he disclaimed the use of arms or coercive measures. When Satan, who perpetually aims to disgrace the cause and subvert the church of God through the errors of miserable men, excited several seditious characters to tumultuous irregularities, he condemned them in the severest manner, and both adorned by his example, and strengthened by his eloquence, the bonds of social order. But when I reflect on this subject, and consider how many great men in the church have committed sad mistakes in this point, I do affirm that no human care, but a divine principle alone, could have sufficed to keep him so constantly within the limits of duty.

(c) ISA. viii. 16.

“ He constantly exhorted every one to ‘ render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar’s, and to God the things which are God’s;’ that is, to worship God in the exercise of genuine repentance, in an open avowal of the truth, in prayer and in a conscientious discharge of duty; and in the fear of God to regard all the civil regulations of the community. Such was Luther. He gave to God the things which are God’s, he taught the truth, and prayed aright, and possessed all those virtues which are well-pleasing to God; and, as a citizen, he shunned every thing seditious. Virtues greater than these cannot, I think, be desired in the present life.

“ But though we extol the excellencies of the man, and the use he made of the gifts of heaven, yet we ought to feel peculiar gratitude to God, who, by his means, restored the true light of the gospel, which we should preserve and diffuse. . . . It is this doctrine of which the Son of God says, ‘ If any man love me he will keep my words, and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.’ ”

The celebrated disputation at Leipsic claims some notice, both on account of its early occurrence in this great polemical campaign, and of Melancthon's concern with it. It lasted from the twenty-seventh of June to the fifteenth of July. Carolostadius, or Carlostadt professor of divinity at Wittemberg, archdeacon of the church of All Saints in that place, and a zealous reformer, and Eckius of Ingoldstadt, the papal advocate, after some preliminary pamphleteering, agreed upon settling the controversy, according to the fashion of the age, by a public debate. George, Duke of Saxony, uncle of the Elector, offered the city of Leipsic for the purpose, expecting, no less than Eckius himself, a triumphant issue to the Catholic cause. Thither the combatants repaired on the eighth of June, Luther and Melancthon accompanying their friend. The assembly was splendid. The Duke of Saxony, the Members of his Council, the Magistrates of Leipsic, the Doctors and Bachelors of the University, with a number of persons of quality, were present; and scribes were appointed to take notes of the debate. It is a curious circumstance that John Agricola, of Eisleben, who was employed on the Lutheran side, was afterwards an opponent of the Reformation, and John Poliander, who was amanuensis to Eckius, attached himself to Luther at the close of the disputation, and afterwards became a preacher of the gospel in Prussia. (f)

(f) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 92.

The first six days' discussion between Eckius and Carlostadt, on the subject of free-will, was conducted with considerable skill by both parties; but it would be very uninteresting to detail. It is sufficient to state that the principal question was, "Whether the human will had any operation in the performance of good works, or whether it was merely passive to the power of divine grace?" Eckius maintained that the will co-operated with the grace of God, and Carlostadt asserted its total inefficacy to perform any meritorious act. Melancthon, who was a hearer, says, it first gave him a practical demonstration of what the ancients understood by sophistry. Eckius undoubtedly acquired the greatest share of popularity, from the superior ease and fluency he discovered compared with his antagonist. Luther soon afterwards obtained the Duke's permission to take the place of Carlostadt in the debate, at the particular request of Eckius who was impatient to encounter the leading Reformer. Each was in truth equally ardent, conscious that a mighty cause was at stake, which demanded the whole force of their respective energies of mind. On the one side was Eckius, impelled by no small degree of confidence in himself from previous conflicts, especially the recent one with Carlostadt, supported by the plaudits of the Catholic party, which was the prevalent one in point of numbers and splendour, and having acquired a very high degree of celebrity (g)—on the other, Luther, persecuted and defamed, conscious that if he betrayed the least feebleness in argument, or the smallest degree of forgetfulness or hesitation, it would be taken advantage of by his wily adversaries, and thus prove detrimental to the important cause he advocated; and that even though he should be completely triumphant in argument, it would rather tend to irritate than convince or silence his opponents. Never was a more important crisis—never a greater cause—never more determined, more equal, or more impetuous antagonists:

. As when two black clouds,
 With heav'n's artillery fraught, come rattling on Over the Caspian, then stand front to front, Hovering a space, till winds the signal blow
 To join their dark encounter in mid air—
 SO FROWN'D THE MIGHTY COMBATANTS—(h)

Eckius selected thirteen propositions from the works of Luther as the subjects of “long debate;” but the principal one that engaged their attention was the foundation of the supremacy claimed by the Roman Pontiffs. After

(g) Eckius had already engaged in public disputations in eight different Universities.

(h) MILTON'S Parad. Lost, B. II.

ten days of violent and incessant discussion, in which Eckius was obliged to admit the eminent "attainments of his reverend opponent," and even to apologize for himself, the victory was claimed by both parties. Luther says he must acknowledge that he and his friends were overcome—"clamore et gestu," by noise and gesture. (i) Hoffman, the rector of the university of Leipsic, refused to give a decision in favour of either; in consequence of which it was referred to the universities of Paris and Erfurt, who neglected, though they did not refuse to do it. The immediate effect of this dispute upon Eckius, was that of increasing his animosity against the Reformer, on whom he determined to revenge himself in every possible way. Luther considers it as some good evidence that the duke felt the force of his arguments, because on one of these controversial days when they were dining together, he laid his hands on the shoulders of the two combatants and exclaimed, "Whether the Pope exists by divine or by human right, he is, however, the Pope!" (k)

If we may judge by the letter of Eckius himself to his friend Hoogstraat, it will not be difficult to ascertain the victorious party. He complains that the Lutherans had great advantages over him, because they brought several books to which they had recourse, they had their disputation in writing and conferred together about an answer, and they were many against one single man. (l) It is no inconsiderable circumstance also, that a large number of the young students immediately quitted Leipsic and repaired to the University of Wittemberg. (m)

(i) SECK. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 73.

(k) LUTH. Op. Tom. I. SECKEND. Hist. Luth. p. 74.

Though Melancthon had undoubtedly favoured the designs, and aided the efforts of Luther previously to this conference, he was roused by the present occasion to a more particular study of the points of difference, and a more vigorous co-operation with the great champion of religious liberty. He had an opportunity of hearing whatever one of the most zealous, eloquent, and able advocates of Popery could say in defence of his system, of perceiving the influence of that system upon the minds of men in general, and of estimating more correctly perhaps than under any other circumstances he could have done the great importance of the controversy itself. “From the period of this famous public disputation, he applied himself more intensely to the interpretation of the Scriptures and the defence of pure christian doctrine, and he is justly esteemed by Protestants to have been under divine Providence, the most powerful coadjutor of the Saxon Reformer.) His mild and peaceable temper, his aversion to schismatic contention, his reputation for piety and for knowledge, and above all, his happy art of exposing error and maintaining truth in the most perspicuous language, all these endowments concurred to render him eminently serviceable to the revival of the religion of Christ. Little did Eckius imagine that the public disputation in which he had foreseen nothing but victory and exultation, and the downfall of Lutheranism would give rise to another theological champion, who should contend for Christian truth and Christian liberty, with the primitive spirit of an apostle. At Wittemberg, Melancthon had probably been well acquainted with Luther's lectures on divinity; but it was in the citadel of Leipsic, that he heard the Romish tenets defended by all the arguments that ingenuity could devise; there his suspicions were strengthened respecting the evils of the existing hierarchy; and there his righteous spirit was roused to imitate, in the grand object of his future inquiries and exertions, the indefatigable endeavours of his zealous and adventurous friend." (n)

(l) LUTH. Op. Tom. I. p. 303.

(m) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 92.

Melancthon represents himself as only a

(n) MILNER'S History of the Church of Christ, Vol. IV. p. 428.

spectator and hearer of this celebrated dispute, (o) but he took the most lively interest in every part of the proceedings, and several writers (p) have stated that he often went up to Carlostadt and whispered so many useful suggestions, that Eckius was provoked to exclaim: ‘Tace tu Philippe, ac tua studia cura, nec me perturba,’ i. e. ‘Hold your tongue Philip, mind your own business, and do not interfere with me.’ His opinion of the different disputants is given in a letter to a friend, and may be relied on for candour and accuracy. (q) “Eckius was much admired for his various and striking ingenuities. You know Carlostadt, he is certainly a man of worth and of extraordinary erudition. As to Luther, whom I have known most intimately, his lively genius, his learning and eloquence I admire, and it is impossible not to be in love with his truly sincere and pure Christian spirit.” It is difficult to ascertain how Eckius procured a copy of this letter, which also contained a general account of the transactions at Leipsic, but he instantly published a most acrimonious reply, calling Melancthon a mere grammarian, (r and with preposterous self-sufficiency affirming, that “although he might have some knowledge of Greek and Latin,” yet “he was not a person with whom a divine could with propriety condescend to enter the lists,” Nothing can be inferred from this contemptuous language, excepting the violent malignity of his temper, and the secret consciousness he felt of the talents of his opponent.

(o) “Neque enim quidquam mihi cum Eccio rerum unquam fuit, et Lipsicæ pugnæ ociosus spectator in reliquo vulgo sedi.” Defensio P. Mel. contra Eccium.

(p) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. ADAM. Vit. Philosophorum, p. 189. WINSHEM. Oratio in Funere Melancthonis.

(q) LUTH. Op. Tom. I. p. 304.

Melancthon replied, in a tract consisting of only five folio pages, but written with so much mildness, elegance, and acuteness, that it proved extremely serviceable to the Lutheran cause. To railing he opposes argument, to arrogance modesty, to dogmatism, sound sense and genuine piety. He contends without virulence and triumphs without parade. Some of the sentiments are so excellent, and the manner in which they are expressed so truly characteristic, that they ought not to be suppressed.

After remarking that “in the epistle which had excited so much indignation, he had merely intended a slight sketch rather than a full description of the Leipsic disputations, for to have done otherwise would have required more time than his numerous occupations admitted,”—he solemnly disavows "ever having intentionally given offence to any one, deeming it both unchristian and inhuman to injure or detract from another's merit. If he had done wrong, he wished it to be imputed either to incaution or accident, and begged to be forgiven, conscious as he was of being totally devoid of any malignity, and forced as he felt himself into this unwelcome arena of contention. He was resolved to be deaf to the calumnies of Eckius, appealing to what he had himself written for his best justification, and he would now conduct his argument without uttering any petulant or unjustifiable reproach against his antagonist, because he was more solicitous for the glory of Christ than respecting the effect which any frivolous calumnies might produce."

(r) In his rage he even coins an epithet of contempt. “Hic inquam, Grammatellus.”

"Eckius," says he, "is confident of being victorious, by appealing to the authority of the holy fathers of the church. But how does this avail him? I am, indeed, by no means disposed to depreciate, on the contrary, I highly reverence those illustrious luminaries of the church and defenders of Christian doctrine. But I cannot deem it rash, as the fathers differ in their sentiments, to receive the SCRIPTURE, and not the varying opinions of men as the ultimate appeal. As there is always some one simple meaning to the language of scripture, (for divine truth is most intelligibly simple), this sense is to be sought by a comparison of passages, and by the general strain of the particular discourse. In this manner we are enjoined to investigate the sacred writings, as we examine the sentiments and decrees of men, by bringing them to the touchstone and trying their consistency. Then it is more satisfactory to consult their judgment on the meaning of scripture, from those places where they professedly explained it, rather than where they are only indulging their own feelings in rhetorical descriptions. We all experience this fact, that scripture is variously interpreted according to our various dispositions of mind and cast of opinion. This or that interpretation pleases, because it seizes our feelings and captivates our passions, and as the polypus imitates the colour of the rock to which it fixes, so we are prone to use our utmost endeavours to conform our sentiments to the prejudices of our own minds. It frequently happens that the mind may admit, and for a time be wonderfully charmed with the genuine force and propriety of a sentiment, but afterwards be incapable of reviving such an impression; and thus the fathers of the church, wrought up to a pitch of feeling, make use of scripture in a sense not in itself bad, but sometimes inapplicable and foreign to the purpose. And though I do not totally condemn this, yet I think it cannot be of much avail in controversy, for according to the Greek adage, καλῶς τρέχουσιν, ἀλλὰ ἐκτὸς ὁδοῦ ‘They run well, but then they do not keep in the course.’ I dare affirm, that sometimes the fathers have given interpretations of scripture, suggested perhaps in a state of high religious feeling, and which might not be erroneous, but which to us inferior men and in a less glowing state of mind, have not seemed to accord with the literal sense. There is a secret manna and food of the soul, to which Paul alludes, when he speaks of spiritually discerning it, which is more easily felt than described.

“But who does not perceive how often the scriptures have been misapplied in the different controversies that have been agitated at various periods, of which innumerable examples might be adduced, so that it has frequently happened, especially of late, that their exposition has been at complete variance with the original text. As to the scholastic method of interpretation it is any thing but simple, a very Proteus, transforming the sense of scripture into allegories, tropes, figures, and diverting the truth from its literal, grammatical, or historical meaning, into I know not what wretched and polluted channels.”

After touching upon the various points of difference, he concludes by saying, “Eckius himself shall be witness if I have not avoided those invidious reflections, which had I been so inclined, might have been indulged." In writing to his friends, he uniformly breathes the same admirable spirit. "If," says he, "you perceive any thing of an antichristian nature in what I send, let me beg you to perform the duty of a genuine friend, admonish me instantly, reprove, yea, lash me as you please. He is, believe me, the dearest of all my friends, who is most honest and downright in his remarks, for you know, as it is not my disposition to dissemble, so I always look upon flattering friends as they deserve. But as genuine Christian affection neither flatters nor admits of flattery, so you will acquire the character of a friend with me, by being a faithful adviser. Eckius rages against us in the most coarse and violent manner, either from a natural impetuosity of disposition or because he considers himself aggrieved, and my purpose is not to inflict, but to compensate for any supposed injury. He is undoubtedly very severe; but I have replied only in a small publication, and with as much moderation as possible, for God is my witness, that I do not cherish the slightest animosity. I might have said more, perhaps, without transgressing the bounds of propriety, but I chose to refrain in order to write not what my adversary deserved, but what was worthy of our own character and cause. After our departure from Leipsic, Eckius certainly reviled Luther in the most outrageous manner.” (s)

Such was the temper of this amiable controversialist, who so well understood the wide difference between opprobrious epithets and solid arguments, and who it is obvious on every occasion sought truth rather than victory. He abhorred the field of strife, and hated Discord as an unnatural and ferocious demon. He valued peace as it ought to be valued, above gold and silver—above honours and empires. He was more anxious to do good than to shine, to carry the olive branch than to wield the sword, to be regarded, or—for such was the temper of the times—to be despised, as an humble peacemaker, than to be blazoned forth as a polemical hero!

(Still let it be recollected, and in this sentiment Melancthon would have concurred, that we ought not so much to lament that controversies have arisen, as that they have been conducted in an anti-christian spirit.) Nothing, it is readily admitted, can be more detrimental to the interests of genuine religion than intemperate and ill-humoured debates, but on the other hand—open, fair, and candid discussion is calculated to promote good will, to pacify resentments, to smooth the wrinkled brow of bigotry, to dissipate doubts, to clear up difficulties, and to elucidate truth. Melancthon may be exhibited as a bright example to all controversial writers of the spirit in which their arguments should be conducted—or rather, let them be induced to imitate a greater than he, who, “WHEN HE WAS REVILED, REVILED NOT, AGAIN!”

(s) MELANCTH. Ep. II. ad Joan. Langium.

CHAP. IV.

A. D. 1520.

Melancthon's marriage—His domestic character—His exemplary virtues—His boundless liberality—Account of his favourite servant John—Epitaph on his tombstone—Candour of Melancthon—His Meekness—Sympathy—Interesting Letter written to a Friend, who had sustained a painful family bereavement—His Piety—Sincerity—Wit—Memory—Temperance—Modesty—Humility—Parental conduct—His value for Time—Marriage and Settlement of his two Daughters—Character of his Sons-in-Law, George Sabinus and Caspar Peucer—Notice of Thurzo, Bishop of Breslaw.

Although from the peculiarity of circumstances which surrounded Melancthon, and the important period in which he lived, we are naturally anxious to trace his public career, and follow him through the principle scenes of an active life, yet in order to accomplish the legitimate purposes of biography, it will be proper to turn aside for a moment to visit him in the recesses of privacy, by this means aiming to impart various instruction, as well as to prepare amusement.

Few persons can claim to rank amongst distinguished scholars or professors, and fewer still are destined by Providence to undergo the struggles, to encounter the resistance, and to pursue the high and holy course of Reformers; but every one occupies a place and possesses an influence in the FAMILY. One or other of the endearing names of father, husband, parent, child, brother, sister, friend, belongs to every human being; to these different relations peculiar and appropriate duties are attached, and from the manner in which they are discharged or neglected, we have an opportunity both of noticing the developement of individual character, and of ascertaining the principle upon which the felicity or infelicity of life in a very considerable degree depends. Here we have all the advantage of example, arising from the interesting consideration that another is acting in our own circumstances, and moving in a similar sphere; and if our personal improvement be not promoted, whether the example be good or bad, we must be strangely deficient in right feeling.

The chief actors in seasons of great political change or great moral revolution, are unfavourably situated for the cultivation of the milder graces; by the collision of opposing parties and contradictory opinions, the sparks of intemperate anger are too apt to be struck out, and dispositions even naturally mild, have sometimes been inflamed. But in cases where it has been deemed necessary or prudent for the sake of the cause, to suppress the rising emotions of resentment, and to check improper violence of language in public, the rage of the heart has burst forth in the circle of unrestrained friendship, and disturbed the hour of private intercourse. Here, however, the character of Melancthon is particularly worthy of admiration. A meek and quiet spirit never forsook him.—He always engaged reluctantly in disputation, and was never or seldom irritated by it, even in the smallest degree. He harboured no resentments. When he retired from the field of strife, he laid aside his weapons and most willingly renounced the glory of the controversialist, for the peace and comfort of the domestic man. He did not bring malevolent feelings or angry passions into his family, for in truth he had none to bring. But it would be doing him great injustice to represent him as a tame or effeminate character. Passions he had, but they were under the due regulation of reason and piety. Religion had completed the work of nature; he was kind and gentle upon principle, as well as by constitution. If the emotions of anger at any time arose in his mind, they were instantly suppressed as a weakness unworthy of a man, as a sin unbecoming a Christian.

In the year 1520, he married a very respectable young lady belonging to one of the principal families in Wittemberg. Her name was Catharine Crappin, and her father was a burgomaster of the town. She is described by Camerarius, whose intercourse with the family was such as to afford him every means of correct information, as a truly religious person, most assiduously attentive to her domestic concerns, extremely liberal to all, and not only benevolent to the poor, and even lavish of her own means of supplying them, but urgent with others whom she could at any time influence to minister to their necessities. With eminent piety of spirit she united great purity of manners, and avoided all extravagance in dress and all luxury in food. Nothing could be more congenial to the taste of Melancthon, who was never captivated by the blandishments of pleasure, nor seduced by the charms of sensuality. In a letter to Langius, dated in November, he speaks of her in terms of high regard, as possessed of a disposition and manners which entirely corresponded with his wishes: and he represents his marriage as the result of serious deliberation, and conformable to the advice of his friends. (t) Seldom have two individuals become more completely one in spirit and character, and seldom has the marriage contract been more firmly sealed by mutual attachment. Reason, religion, and love, presided over their happy union, and confirmed their solemn vows.

During this year he commenced a course of lectures on the epistle of Paul to the Romans, and so indefatigable was he in the regular discharge of this and every other academical duty, that the suspension of the usual course even for the single day of his marriage was so remarkable,

(t) “ Uxor enim datur mihi Catarina Crapti, non dico, quam non sperata aut quam frigenti, sed iis puella moribus, ea animi indole qualem à diis immortalibus optare debueram: δέξια ὁ θεος τεκμαίροιο dextra Deus significet, i. Deus omnia fausta firmet. Equidem expendi argumenta, quæ in hanc rem incidere possunt, nisi fallor, omnia, ut satis sciam quid probandum fuerit. Verum secutus sum amicorum consilium, qui me ad rem uxorium hortati sunt propter periculum ex infirmitate carnis et carnalis libertatis improbitatem. Neque enim verè Christiana libertas fuit, qua literas deamavimus plus æquo. Et cavendum nobis fuit quod monet Paulus ne libertatem occasionem faciamus carni. Ne tu improbes cæptum opto. Majus voto fuerit, si probaveris. Cordum nostrum admone promissi ἐπιθαλαμίας.” Ep. 5. ad Langium.

as to be publicly intimated in the following curious notice :

A studiis hodiè facit oia grata Philippus
Nec vobis Pauli dogmata sacra leget.

Rest from your studies, Philip says you may,
He'll read no lectures on St. Paul to day.

Liberality was a distinguishing feature in the mind of Melancthon and his excellent wife; and this was apparent both in the common acts of charity and in the more diffusive spirit of universal benevolence. Neither of them was disposed by oppressive exactions or parsimonious care to enrich themselves. They deeply sympathized with the feelings of the needy and the wretched; never being deaf to their importunities, but readily and most liberally supplying them with money and sustenance. The necessitous might have applied to them with the utmost propriety, the language of St. Paul to the Corinthian church. "To their power, yea, and beyond their power, I bear record, they were willing of themselves, praying us with much intreaty, that we would receive the gift."^(u) Their house was crowded with a constant succession of comers and goers of every age, sex and condition, some pressing in to receive, and others departing well stored from this ample repository of kindness and bounty. It formed a part of their domestic regulations, never to refuse an applicant! (x)

(u) 2 COR. viii. 3, 4.

In addition to those who frequented the house to beg, the celebrity of Melancthon proved a severe tax upon his time, for multitudes resorted to him to seek his advice, to obtain recommendatory letters, to request the correction of their compositions, to lay before him various complaints, to solicit his aid in literary pursuits, or perhaps merely for the purpose of seeing so distinguished a person; all of whom enjoyed free access. Sometimes persons whom he could not altogether approve would solicit his valuable recommendations; these he has been known to dismiss with pecuniary presents, as the best method which his benevolent spirit could devise, of being released from their unwelcome importunity.

It seems scarcely possible to conceive how amidst such a profusion of benevolence Melancthon could support his own family, especially when it is recollected, that while none were sent empty away, he not only did not aim to grow richer, but frequently refused those emoluments which others usually grasp at with the utmost eagerness. Instead of availing himself of the influence of the great with whom he was connected to advance him to dignity and opulence, he was known to refuse even the presents of princes. With an admirable disinterestedness, he lectured on divinity and the Holy Scriptures, two whole years without any salary; and when a pension of two hundred florins was assigned him by the Elector of Saxony, he excused himself, by saying, "I am unable to devote myself to the duty with sufficient attention and assiduity to warrant an acceptance of it." The Elector, however, by Luther's advice, intimated that it would suffice to give one or two lectures in a week, as his health might permit. (y)

(x) "Nam ea domus disciplina erat, ut nihil cuiquam negaretur." CAM. Vit. Mel.

At the time which will be hereafter more particularly noticed, when the Elector Maurice was desirous of attaching Melancthon to his interests, he made inquiry into his circumstances, and whether he was not in need of some pecuniary aid. Upon his dissembling this, the prince told him, he wished he would at least ask some favour, assuring him that whatever it might be, it should readily be granted. He replied, that "he felt perfectly satisfied with his salary, and was not anxious for any augmentation of it, or indeed for any thing else." Maurice still continued to urge him, and at length he said, "Well, as your highness requires me to ask some favour, I ask my dismissal."—The prince found it necessary, however, to solicit his continuance in his professorship, remarking to the gentlemen of his court, "That he had never seen nor experienced any thing like Melancthon's conduct, who was not only too disinterested to ask for any thing, but would not even accept it when proffered." (z)

It is proper to mention, with marked respect, an invaluable servant, of the name of John, who lived with him many years. John was a man of tried honesty and fidelity, adorning the humble sphere in which he moved, and very much beloved by his master. To his management we must in part look for an explanation of the mystery to which we have alluded, namely, the possibility of being so lavishly benevolent with such restricted and apparently inadequate means. The whole duty of provisioning the family was entrusted to this domestic, whose care, assiduity and prudence, amply justified the unbounded confidence reposed in him. He made the concerns of the family his own, avoiding all useless expenditure and watching with a jealous eye over his master's property. He was also the first instructor of the children in the family during their infancy. This merits to be distinctly recorded, not only because such a servant is a kind of rara avis in terris, but because, as in the present instance, he may contribute essentially to the general good, by preventing the waste of those means which a benevolent spirit will ever feel anxious to consecrate to purposes of public utility. John grew old in his master's service, and in the year 1553, expired in his house, after the long residence of almost thirty-four years, amidst the affectionate regrets of the whole family. Melancthon invited the academicians to his funeral, delivered an oration over his grave, and composed the following epitaph for his tombstone :

(z) VAN DE CORPUT. Leven ende Dood van Phil. Mel. p. 667.

Joannes patrii Nicri discessit ab undis
 Huc accersitus voce, Philippe, tua
 Quem comes exilii juvat precibusque fideque Nam verè gnato credidit ille DEI.
 Ipsius hic dominus sepelivit corpus inane
 Vivit, conspectu mens fruiturque DEI.

Imitated.

Here at a distance from his native land,
 Came faithful John, at Philip's first command;
 Companion of his exile, doubly dear,
 Who in a servant found a friend sincere—
 And more than friend, a man of faith and prayer, Assiduous soother of his master's care;—
 Here to the worms his lifeless body's given,
 But his immortal soul sees God in heaven.

Perhaps no one ever attended more scrupulously than Melancthon to the injunction of Jesus Christ, "When thou doest alms, let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth; that thy alms may be in secret." (a) He was unostentatious in every thing, but especially in works of charity. Satisfied with the approbation of conscience and of God, he manifested no solicitude for the applauses of men, and was content to do good without being praised for it. It will be easy to believe, that he abounded in acts of kindness which, being known only to himself, no book records excepting the registers of heaven; especially when it is stated from unquestionable authority that, on several occasions when his pecuniary resources have been completely exhausted, he would contrive to supply the necessitous by privately taking cups and other vessels appropriated to domestic use, to a trader to sell, even at a very low and disadvantageous rate. (b)

Melancthon received many presents of gold and silver coin. These he would often give to the very first person, who from avarice or curiosity might be induced to ask for them; not from any undervaluation of these ancient specimens, but simply from a disposition to oblige. Mere self-gratification appears seldom to have entered into his views, much less did such a feeling acquire any degree of ascendancy over him. His prevailing desire was to communicate pleasure to others and he was satisfied with the feast, the intellectual and moral feast which a refined benevolence only can provide; in which respect, it must be acknowledged, that in a very important sense "he fared sumptuously every day." (c) On one remarkable occasion when he had accumulated a large collection of coins and curiosities, he offered a certain stranger who seemed peculiarly gratified with the sight, to take any one which he might happen to feel a wish to possess; upon which, the stranger said, with consummate effrontery, "I have a particular wish for them all." Melancthon, though he did not dissemble his displeasure, nevertheless granted his unwarrantable request. (d)

(a) MATT. viii. 3.

(b) CAM. Vit. Mel.

If the parsimonious or the prudent should be disposed to censure this excessive and prodigal benevolence, alleging that if it be capable to "withhold more than is meet," (e) it is at least not very laudable to squander the gifts of Providence indiscriminately upon every class of importunate beggars; be it remembered, that there is an essential difference between an obvious crime and an apparent excess of virtue—between the conduct of the spendthrift and that of the person who is lavishly bountiful. In the one you perceive the very essence of selfishness, in the other the exuberance of kindness. The one lives only to seek his own gratification; self is the end he pursues, and the contemptible idol he worships; no sacrifices are considered too costly to be offered to this paltry god, and every thing is rendered subservient to this infamous idolatry; the other, considering himself in some degree the depository and trustee of the divine beneficence, and valuing the possessions of life only so far as they provide for his own immediate necessities, and may be made to contribute to the comfort of others, becomes at least serviceable to a number of his fellow creatures. He feels the claims of humanity, and fulfils the high duties of a neighbour. If such a person be a little more liberal in distributing than the narrow calculations of human policy or prudence seem to admit, he acts in conformity with the dictates of a pure and disinterested benevolence, reaps a rich harvest of satisfaction, and manifests the spirit while he fulfils the precepts of the Saviour of the world.

If it be alleged that it is no one's duty to impoverish himself or to injure his family, even though it be the result not of a selfish but of a benevolent expenditure, this is conceded—yet in the present case, the question does not respect the waste of property already possessed, but the neglect to accumulate. If an individual be satisfied for himself with that station of life which Providence has assigned him, and with those pecuniary resources, small or great, which he already possesses, and if he prefer using that supply which industry, manual, or mental, procures for him, in doing good to others, instead of aspiring after the greater honours or emoluments within his power—if he choose even to refuse them when offered, either from an apprehension of moral danger or from mere indifference, will any one represent this as culpable?—Surely we ought rather to admire than to censure such conduct; it evinces a noble spirit of disinterestedness, and a glorious superiority of mind to the attractions of earthly splendour, which is worthy of imitation.

In this statement of some of the excellent qualities of Melancthon, his extreme Candour and Kindness must not be overlooked. He was never known to asperse any one, either openly or by insinuation. Nothing was further from his intentions than to injure another's character or reputation, and if his were attacked, no one could manifest a more exemplary patience. He not only could not be moved to resentment by the misconduct of offenders, but did not relax in his benevolence or familiarity with them.

No dark suspicions pervaded his mind, no malevolence or envy disturbed his placid spirit. The calm summer of his soul was never beclouded or distracted with tempestuous passions. (f).

Sympathy with the sufferings of others was not among the least of his eminent qualities, of which, perhaps, the best possible illustration will be afforded by translating one of his letters to an afflicted friend, whose sorrow for the loss of a beloved child, the moment he heard it, he hastened to alleviate. His sentiments are to be regarded as those of the heart, and not as the mere effusions of a formal or complimentary friendship. An affectionate disposition may, and indeed will, by a generous participation, share another's woes, even though it has not yet tasted the bitterness of bereavement or personal affliction of any kind; but in order to afford effectual consolation to the mourner, it seems requisite that the person whose friendly spirit hastens to his relief, should have been himself a sufferer, that he may be duly qualified to select appropriate language, and that the distressed individual himself may feel a consciousness that his words are not words of course. Experience is the best of all instructors, and affliction superinduces a sensibility, and teaches a language which cannot possibly be attained in any degree of perfection by another process. And, "As in water face answereth to face, so the heart of man to man." (g) In this view Melancthon was likely to prove a judicious as well as a sympathizing friend, for during the whole of his life he drank deeply and drank often, of the bitter cup. The following letter besides claims insertion for its excellence, and as it is without date may be introduced here with propriety.

(f) "Candidus fuit, sincerus, apertus, minimè suspicax."
HEERBRAND. Orat. Funeb. in obit. Melancthonis.

"To John Pseffinger, with affectionate salutations.

"God has implanted the principle of natural affection in mankind, for the double purpose of strengthening the bonds of human society, and teaching us to realize the ardour of his love to his own Son and to us. He therefore approves the affection we cherish for our offspring, and the piety of our grief for their loss. Natural affection is peculiarly forcible in minds of a superior order; on which account, I doubt not, that the loss of your son—a son too not only possessed of the most amiable dispositions, but of a mind well stored with literature, not only inclined by his very constitution to moral habits, but under the constant influence of true religion, and already engaged in a course of study in which his capacity promised so much—the loss of such a son, I say, must affect you with the deepest grief. And be assured, I am not disposed to accuse you of weakness, on the contrary, I acknowledge—I commend your piety—I truly lament your personal bereavement and the public loss; for I am apprehensive that in these times the churches will feel the want of teachers properly instructed. But you are well aware that we are permitted to mourn, though not immoderately. It is certain that these events are under divine superintendance; it becomes us, therefore, to manifest a due submission of mind to God, and quietly to resign ourselves to his disposal in every season of adversity.

I will not now advert to the physical causes of death, for though naturally exposed to various diseases, let us regard the will of God in this dispensation, and not so much our own loss; and let us realize the blessings which in being removed from this afflictive life and these calamitous times your son is called to share. If we truly loved him, we shall rejoice in his happiness; and if we rightly understand Christian truth, we shall be disposed to congratulate him upon the society of the heavenly assembly, where he no longer drinks the streams of knowledge mingled and polluted as they are in the present world, but enjoys free access to the pure and infinite fountain of wisdom, holds intercourse with the Son of God himself, the prophets and apostles, and with inexpressible delight joins in praising God for so early an admission to that illustrious assembly; the thought of which may well enkindle within us a desire to escape from our earthly imprisonment.

“ Perhaps it increases your sorrow to recollect his capacity, his erudition, his virtue; and you fondly wish for the charming company of such a son. But these very excellences themselves ought to diminish your regrets, because you know how they contributed to the good of many during the short period of his mortal race so that he was not a useless incumbrance upon society. You witnessed the evidences of his growing piety in this world of trial, which were but the beginnings of celestial life, and proved that his departure hence was only a removal to the happy intercourse of heaven. In fact, as often as you reflect upon these qualities of your dear son, you have reason to be thankful to God, who has shewn such kindness both to you and to him, as to confer upon him the greatest of all favours: for a grateful mind will record mercies as well as crosses.

“ It is becoming, therefore, as you know, to be resigned to the will of God who requires us to moderate our griefs, and to believe that no real evil has befallen your son. Let these considerations afford you comfort and repress undue anxiety. The minds of men are naturally influenced by examples, for it seems proper that we should not refuse to endure the afflictions incident to others, and which must be sustained as the common law of our nature. How calamitous must the death of Abel have appeared to our first parents, by the murder of whom their future hopes in reference to the church seemed to be cut off in regard to their own family, and how much greater cause for sorrow attached to them, when the human race consisted of so small a number, than can belong to you, who possess a surviving family, in which distinct evidences of piety may be traced? They were doubly wounded by the death of one son, and still more by the wickedness of his impious brother.

“Innumerable instances might be adduced from the history of all ages. Recollect the old Bishop of Antioch, whose three sons were slain by the tyrant Decius, in the very presence of their parents, who not only witnessed his cruel conduct, but exhorted and encouraged their children to suffer: after which, their mother beheld the murder of her husband, and having embraced the cold remains of her children and her husband, solemnly committed them to the grave.

“ You remember also, the history of the Emperor Mauritius, who stood a silent spectator while his son and daughter were slain, but when the murderer approached his wife, he exclaimed, amidst a flood of tears, “ Righteous art thou O Lord, and upright are thy judgments.” (h)

“ Wise men have often inquired with astonishment, for what reason the feeble nature of man is oppressed with such a weight of afflictions ; but we who can trace the causes to a divine origin, ought to be resigned to the appointments of God, and avail ourselves of those remedies for grief which divine goodness has revealed : and while these are your solace, reflect upon this bright example of domestic piety.

“ If when you are absent for a season from your family, and placed at a distance amongst persons uncongenial to your taste, the hope of returning home alleviates your vexations ; so now you may be stimulated to patience by the consideration that in a little time you will again embrace your son in the delightful assembly of the skies, adorned with a more splendid distinction than any station on earth can command, I mean, with THE GLORY OF GOD, and placed among prophets, apostles, and the shining hosts of heaven, there to live for ever, enjoying the vision of God, and the enrapturing intercourse of Christ himself, the holy apostles and prophets. Let us constantly look forward to this glorious eternity during the whole of our troublesome pilgrimage as to the goal of our course; and let us bear with the greater fortitude our present afflictions because the race is short, and we are destined not to the fugitive enjoyments of this life, but to the possession of that blessed eternity in which we shall participate the wisdom and righteousness of God.

“But as you, my learned and pious friend, are well acquainted with these truths, I have written the more briefly; and I pray God to invigorate both your body and mind. You remember it is said, ‘In HIM we live and move and have our being.’ (i)—Farewell.”

The preceding letter renders it almost superfluous to state as a matter of fact, what must be at once obvious to every reader, and what every future transaction in Melancthon's life will render increasingly evident, that he was remarkable for Piety; humble, genuine, undissembled piety. The association of great intellectual capacities with bad moral habits is always to be deeply deplored, and no exterior embellishments of nature or art, no power of mind, no fascination of manners, can render an infidel in principle and a profligate in character otherwise than offensive and contemptible. Vice always degrades even the great, while religion inexpressibly ennobles even the little. In the present instance we have not to weep over talent perverted and abused by vicious associations, but to rejoice in seeing it devoted to the best of purposes, and forming an alliance with true piety, which was in fact the pillar of his confidence, the brightest ornament of his unblemished character, the consolation of his most desponding hours, the stimulating motive of all his public exertions, and the LAW of his family.

(i) ACTS. xvii. 28.

Among other interesting fragments of Melancthon's composition, a short but expressive GRACE, designed for the table, and probably used by himself, is extant. (k)

BENEDICTIO MENSÆ.

His Epulis donisque tuis benedicite Christe
 Ut foveant jussu corpora fessa tuo,
 Non alit in fragili panis modo corpore vitam
 Sermo tuus vitæ tempora longa facit.

THE TABLE BLESSED.

To these provisions which enrich our board,
 The gifts thy liberal Providence bestows, Saviour, thy benediction now afford,
 From which alone their power to nourish flows.
 A few short years material food supplies
 Corporeal waste, and cheers our fainting hearts;
 But thy imperishable word imparts,
 A principle of life that never dies.

(k) MELANCTH. Epigrammata. Hagan. 1521.

Or,

O Saviour!—

Bless what thy providential care

Has for our bodies given ;

But thy good word (superior fare !)

Sustains the soul for heaven.

Melancthon was characterized by Sincerity, and totally devoid of every thing like deceit and dissimulation. There were no reserves about him ; all was transparent, open, and honest, while at the same time, his manners were remarkably captivating. From this temper resulted a freeness in common conversation, which led him sometimes to express himself with a degree of inconsideration : and even when his intimate friends have endeavoured to check his frankness from an apprehension of what indeed not unfrequently happened, that his words would be invidiously misrepresented, such was his consciousness of entire purity of motive, that they could seldom or never succeed in rendering him cautious. He was not only communicative, but his conversation was seasoned with Wit. Disputing one day with a certain Italian on the real presence in the Eucharist, “ how is it,” said he, “ that you Italians will have a God in the sacramental bread—you, who do not believe there is a God in heaven ?” When he first changed his religious views, he conceived it impossible for others to withstand the evidence of truth in the public ministry of the gospel, but after forming a better acquaintance with human nature, and living to witness the futility of those fond but ill-founded expectations which a warm hearted piety is at first disposed to cherish, he remarked, that “he found old Adam was too hard for young Melancthon.”

He was possessed of an extraordinary Memory, and maintained that temperance in eating and drinking, that equanimity of mind, and those habits of reflection which essentially conduce to the perfection of this faculty. He was also inquisitive and read much, but with proper selection; retaining not only the general strain of the discourse, but the very words of the writer. (1) Nor were these merely lodged in his memory, for he was remarkable for the facility with which he could call into use whatever he knew. The various kinds of information he gained were so arranged in the different compartments of his great mental repository, that he could at any time, and without difficulty find whatever he wanted: for he had the power of recollecting as well as of retaining knowledge. This qualification fitted him for controversy and made him peculiarly feared by his opponents.

(1) “Fuitque in eo valde bona memoria non rerum modo et sententiarum sed verborum quoque et orationis. Quæ igitur legendo comprehenderat, ea hærebant in animo ipsius.” CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 60.

Such was his Modesty that he would never deliver his opinion upon important subjects without deliberation and serious thought. He considered no time misspent and no pains ill bestowed in the search of Truth, and he was incessantly occupied in examining for himself. Sophistry and every species of evasion in argument excited his just abhorrence; seldom or never could it escape his penetrating eye, and whenever he detected it no considerations could deter him from expressing the most marked disapprobation. His own conceptions were clear, his language perspicuous, and his intentions upright. There was such a transparency in the whole stream of his argument in public discourses or disputations, that you could see to the very bottom of his motives and principles.

He was kind to a fault; and so exceedingly Humble, that in the common concerns of life he was not ashamed to stoop even to menial offices if they were not base or dishonourable. Frequently he would put to shame the ill-humoured disinclination of the lowest servants to discharge any part of their duty, by doing it himself.

The same happy combination of modesty and humility characterized all his deportment, and in a very conspicuous manner influenced his private conduct, his public transactions, and his various writings. It is not every author however conscious of the blemishes which may have disfigured his first publications, that would be willing to make concessions of this description, “ Nothing is more foolish than to attempt the defence of folly. An ingenuous mind will acknowledge its mistakes, especially in subjects of a literary kind, and candidly confess its weakness or negligence in order that youth may learn from the example of others, to be more diligent in investigation and more careful in their mode of study. I will not scruple therefore to censure some things in this (the first) edition of my own writings, and will not only recapitulate the course of my juvenile studies, but explain my meaning in some public transactions, and state why I issued certain theological publications.” (m)

M. Baillet, with a zeal natural to one of his faith, is anxious that the church of Rome should be duly honoured as the mother of so illustrious an offspring. “ His parents,” says he, “ were most excellent Catholics, irreproachable in their manners, exemplary in their conduct, careful to maintain in their family the fear of God and a due observance of his commandments, walking before God with a simplicity, a fidelity, and a zeal like that of primitive Christians. I feel myself constrained to state these particulars, that you may remember to attribute to Melancthon's excellent education all that you read or hear said of his sweetness of temper, courtesy, temperance, modesty, and others virtues, for which the Protestants have so much extolled him: and that you may consider these qualities as produced or cherished in the bosom of the Catholic church." (n) Varillas, one of the greatest enemies of the Reformation, has nevertheless spoken of him in the following manner: "He possessed a sweetness and mildness of temper, that rendered him incapable of returning injury for injury. In observing the exactest rules of morality, he only followed his inclination, and notwithstanding the meanness of his birth, (o) he practised the utmost generosity his means would allow. No German wrote the Latin language with greater ease or in a more intelligible manner, yet he was never so attached to his own productions, or so prejudiced in their favour as to refuse making any corrections suggested by his friends." (p)

(m) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 110. Ep. de seipso et de edit. prima suorum scriptorum.

(n) BAILLET Trait. Hist. des Enfans devenues celeb. par leurs Etudes ou par leurs Ecrits, p. 130.

(o) The Papists were extremely fond of representing their adversaries as low and baseborn persons, in order as they imagined, to render their cause contemptible.

(p) VARILLAS Hist. des Heres. l. 7. So far indeed was he from any over-valuation of his own productions, that he Neither Melancthon's attachment to literature, nor his multifarious engagements in public seduced him from the cultivation of domestic feelings, and the discharge of parental duties. His wife and children, ever dear to his heart, were not forgotten amidst the deepest abstractions of study, or the greatest perplexity of engagement.

The habits of studious men have sometimes been represented as tending to disqualify them for the familiar intercourse of domestic or social life. It is often long before the clouds which profound study gathers over the mind can be entirely chased away, even by the cheering influence of innocent conviviality. At the same time a great man never appears greater than in descending from the high station where public opinion or extraordinary genius has enthroned him to an approachable familiarity. It is then his friends will no longer censure his abstractions nor his affectionate family deprecate his fame. Melancthon may be appealed to as a pleasing suffered his papers, and what was most unjustifiably negligent, even the letters of his most distinguished friends to lie about exposed to any one's inspection. The consequence was, that many of them were lost. "Quinetiam libres scriptaque sua omnia et litteras quæ afferebantur quotidie plurimæ à diversis et dissimilibus conditione, loco, fortuna, relinquere omnium oculis et manibus expositas, ex quibus subtractum plurimum esse constat." CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 57, 58.

illustration of this remark. A Frenchman one day, found him holding a book in one hand and rocking his child's cradle with the other. Upon his manifesting considerable surprize, Melancthon took occasion from the incident to converse with his visitor on the duties of parents, and on the regard of heaven for little children in such a pious and affectionate manner, that his astonishment was quickly transformed into admiration. The fondness he cherished for his own family extended to children in general. He possessed, in a very eminent degree, the rare art of making himself a captivating and instructive companion to them. He descended with the most happy ease to their level, promoted by his jocularly their little pleasures, and engaged with all his heart in their games and festivities. He would often exercise their ingenuity, by devising fictions and puzzles, and took great delight in relating useful scraps of history or memorable tales. (q)

He always estimated Time as a most precious possession. It is said of him, that when he made an appointment, he expected not only that the day or the hour, but that the minute should be fixed, in order that time might not be squandered away in the vacuity or idleness of suspence.

In his youth he was remarkably troubled with sleeplessness, which the regularity of his general habits at length overcame. When letters or papers arrived in the evening he always referred them to the next morning for inspection, lest the hours devoted to sleep which he found indispensable to the due preservation of health, should be disturbed.

His matrimonial connection was not only a happy, but a very lasting one. Formed for each other, this favoured pair were not destined to suffer the pangs of early separation; but lived, so far as can be ascertained, in undisturbed harmony for thirty-seven years. They had four children, two sons and two daughters. Of the former little or nothing is known. It seems probable they died in early life, for in a letter written to Camerarius his most intimate friend, in April 1524, he intimates their delicacy of constitution which seemed to require some change of air, on which account he meditated their removal for a time to Leipsic. (r)

Anne his eldest daughter appears to have been the favourite child, for she was not only handsome and accomplished, but of a very

(r) “Pueros meos cogito Lipsiam ad Lottherum aliquantisper mittere, nam aër noster nescio quid minatur.” MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. IV. 14. ad Joach. Camerar. He afterwards speaks of one of his sons accompanying him in his visit to Nuremberg in 1526, an account of which will be mentioned in the proper place. Ep. Lib. IV. 29.

literary turn. Luther in one of his letters, calls her “the elegant daughter of Philip.”(s) On the sixth of November 1536, she was married to George Sabinus. (t) This young man, a native of Brandenburg, being sent to Melancthon with the powerful recommendation of Erasmus to be educated, became an inmate of his family. His thirst after knowledge was so unbounded, that no labour however great, which was deemed requisite to attain it, damped his inextinguishable zeal. By day and by night he devoted himself to study, and overlooked or despised every obstacle in the path of knowledge. But his taste even surpassed his zeal, particularly in poetic compositions. Camerarius relates that he had seen him weep abundantly when reading an exquisite piece of poetry, and that though he would deeply deplore his own infelicity in composition, no one in reality excelled him.(u) His poem entitled, “Res gestæ Cæsarum Germanorum,” procured him not only a very extensive reputation in Germany, but the notice and patronage of the most enlightened princes of the age, and he became successively professor of the Belles Lettres at Frankfort on the Oder, rector of the New Academy of Königsberg, and counsellor to the Elector of Brandenburg. It will not appear surprising that such a youth, and in such favourable circumstances should have ingratiated himself into Melancthon's esteem, and attracted the affections of his accomplished daughter.

(s) EP. II. 92.

(t) MEL. ADAM. Vit. Philosophorum, p. 227.

(u) “Vidi ego hunc Georgium, qui postea Sabini nomine celebris fuit valde tenera adhuc ætate, lacrimas profundentem ad lectionem boni et elegantis carminis. Audivi tristes querelas ejus deplorantis suam infelicitatem in scribendo, cum non solum per ætatem nihil quod perfectum esset ipse elaborare, sed ne intelligere quidem rationem perficiendi elaborandique adhuc valeret.” CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 206.

It is related of Sabinus, that on a certain occasion when he was dining in company with Stigelius and Melancthon, the latter engaged them in an extempore poetical contest. Sabinus being the elder of the two was required to begin, which he did in these words:—

“ Carmina conscribant alii dictante Lyæo Multa sit in versu cura laborque meo ;”

Some silly scribblers soon their pages fill—Let care and labour regulate my quill!

to which Stigelius replied,

“ Carmina componant alii sudante cerebro Nulla sit in versu cura laborque meo.”

Some toil and sweat to elaborate a rhyme—
 Let no such care nor labour waste my time.

The two poetical gladiators had the satisfaction of being equally extolled by Melancthon, the one for his attack, and the other for his defence. (x)

Stigelius obtained a considerable poetical notoriety, and Melancthon has expressed a very high opinion of his merit. (y) He wrote a variety of epitaphs, epigrams, and epithalamia, a metrical translation of many of the Psalms of David, with other little compositions, of which the following monumental inscription for himself is not the least curious:—

Hic ego Stigelius jaceo; quis curat? ut omnis Negligat hoc mundis; scit tamen ipse Deus.

Here lies Stigelius;—but who marks the spot?
Well—let the world neglect me! God will not.

But this apparently happy and suitable connection was destined to become a source of considerable affliction. Sabinus was very different in character from his father-in-law Melancthon. The elegant pleasures of literature did not satisfy him; for he was naturally ambitious, and the fame he acquired by his poetic publications, fed the secret flame till it could no longer be suppressed. Melancthon was attached to the more humble life of a man of letters and a man of piety, nor could he be induced by the most pressing intreaties to pursue any measures for the promotion of his children to posts of civil distinction and emolument. He employed all his skill to cure the raging fever of Sabinus, but in vain; for the poet worshipped fame and wealth. They became therefore discontented with each other, and found it best to separate. The lovely spirit of Melancthon however prevented any serious dissention, and they eventually parted with mutual good will and kindness. Sabinus took his wife into Prussia, where to her father's inexpressible grief she died after a residence of four years at Königsberg.

(x) TEISSIER Eloges des Hommes Savans—Art. George Sabin. MEL. ADAM. Vit. Philosophorum, p. 231.

(y) “Etsi enim Italia una videtur suavia et venusta ingenia gignere, tamen ferè adfirmari potest, nondum post Ovidii ætatem cujusquam in Italiâ venam fuisse dulciorem et elegantiorum Stigeliana. Et in Germaniâ arbitror Micyllum et alios qui carmen felicissimè scribunt, libenter Stigelio proximum ab Eobano locum tribuere.” MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 49, ad Georg. Princip. Anhalt.

The youngest daughter of Melancthon was married in the year 1550, to Casper Peucer, whose name is one of the most celebrated in German literature, as well as in the annals of the Reformation. He was a Physician, and through the favour of the Elector of Saxony, made professor of Medicine in the University of Wittemberg. He was always sent for to Court when any important deliberations of a medical kind were held, and enjoyed free access to the Elector. His writings are numerous in medicine, mathematics, and theology. Above all, he is to be ranked amongst the illustrious sufferers for the cause of Truth.

After the death of Melancthon, Peucer, in conjunction with the divines of Wittemberg and Leipsic, and of several ecclesiastics and persons of distinction in the Court of Saxony, aimed to introduce the Calvinistic sentiments respecting the Eucharist, denying most strenuously the Lutheran doctrine of the corporeal presence of Christ. Great commotions being excited, the Elector Augustus, in the year 1571, called a solemn assembly of the Saxon Divines, and of all persons concerned in the administration of ecclesiastical affairs, at Dresden. Augustus commanded them to adopt his opinion respecting the Eucharist, which at that time agreed with that of Peucer and the moderate Lutherans; but he was soon seduced by the insinuations of their adversaries, who represented the church as in danger, to change sides, and in consequence of finding that the Saxon Divines who were the disciples of Melancthon, propagated their sentiments with the utmost assiduity, he called a new convention at Torgaw in the year 1574, where he assumed the Dictator's chair and wielded the Persecutor's sword. Of those who denied the corporeal presence, some were imprisoned, others banished, and others compelled to renounce their sentiments. Peucer had the honour of suffering amongst the former. He endured the severities of a cruel imprisonment for ten years, and was released at last only through the intercession of the Prince of Anhalt. (z)

Among the rare instances of eminent persons attached to the reformed cause in the early period of its progress which is now under review, comprising the year 1520, the name of John Thurzo, Bishop of Breslaw, in Silesia, claims a distinguished notice. It is true little, too little is known of him; but as the early traveller watches the commencement and the gradual progress of the dawning day, by the first beams that strike successively upon surrounding objects, so the observant reader will unite with the vigilant biographer, in hailing each indication of increasing light in a world enveloped in mysterious darkness. The Bishop of Breslaw, therefore, ought to be mentioned for the pleasing singularity of his character, as the decided friend of the infant Reformation. He died in peace in the month of August, meriting this noble eulogium.—(a)

“Who is there,” says Melancthon, “that

(z) ADAM. Vit. Medicor. Germ. MOSH. Eccles. Hist. Cent. 16.

(a) This was expressed in a letter addressed to the good bishop, which he did not live long enough to receive. Luther wrote to him at the same time, in language indicative of an equal esteem. SCULTET. Annal. Evang. p. 61. VON DER HARDT. Hist. Lit. Reform. P. 5. p. 33.

does not love the man, who, so far as I know is the only man in Germany, that by his authority, learning, and piety, has furnished an example of what a bishop ought to be? If the Christian world could but produce ten persons of a similar stamp and cast of thinking (συμφράδμονες), as Homer says, I should not doubt of seeing the kingdom of Christ in some measure restored.”

after calling upon Christ, St. Peter, St. Paul, and all the saints to interpose in behalf of the church (b) forty-one propositions are extracted from his writings, and condemned as pestilential, scandalous and offensive to pious minds; all persons are interdicted from reading them upon pain of excommunication, and unless the heretic should present himself at Rome within sixty days in order to take his trial before the supreme

(b) “LEO EPISCOPUS, SERVUS SERVORUM DEI. Ad perpetuam rei memoriam. EXSURGE DOMINE et iudica causam tuam: memor esto improperorum tuorum eorum quæ ab insipientibus fiunt tota die EXSURGE PETRE et pro pastorali cura præfata, ut præfertur, tibi divinitus demandata, intende in causam sanctæ Rom. Ecclesiæ matris omnium Ecclesiarum ac fidei magistræ, quam tu, jubente Deo, tuo sanguine, consecrâsti EXSURGE TU QUOQUE, quæsumus, PAULE, qui eam tua doctrina ac pari martyrio illuminâsti atque illustrâsti. Jam enim surgit novus Porphyrius. : EXSURGAT, denique, OMNI SANCTORUM AC RELIQUA UNIVERSALIS ECCLESIA, cujus vera sacrarum literarum interpretatione posthabita, quidam quorum mentem pater mendacii excæcavit, ex veteri hæreticorum instituto, apud semetipsos sapientes, scripturas easdem aliter quam Spiritus Sanctus flagitet, proprio duntaxat sensu, ambitionis, auræque popularis causa (teste Apostolo) interpretantur, imo vero torquent et adulterant, ita ut juxta Hieronymum, jam non sit Evangelium Christi, sed hominis, aut quod pejus est, diaboli. EXSURGAT, inquam, præfata sancta ecclesia Dei, et unâ cum beatissimis apostolis præfatis apud Deum omnipotentem intercedat, ut purgatis ovium suarum erroribus, eliminatisque a fidelium finibus hæresibus universis ecclesiæ suæ sanctæ pacem et unitatem conservare dignetur.” BULLA LEONIS X.

Pontiff, he is fully EXCOMMUNICATED. But these menaces were ineffectual; in many places the decree was delayed or evaded—even at Leipsic it was violently opposed and at Erfurt it was forcibly wrested from Eckius, torn in pieces and thrown into the river by a body of academicians. Many of the Roman Catholic writers condemn the imprudence of Leo in this and other hasty proceedings against the Saxon Reformer, but it is more than probable that had the effect been different, they would have spared the Tiara.

Immediately previous to the publication of this celebrated anathema, Luther had been offered an asylum from his persecutors by Sylvester Schaumberg, a Franconian knight, whose son was under the tuition of Melancthon. "I offer you," said he, "my own protection, and that of one hundred noblemen in Franconia, with whom you can live in safety until your doctrine has undergone a deliberate investigation." The state of his mind at this critical juncture may be ascertained from his own language to his friend Spalatine the Elector's secretary, upon transmitting to him the generous letter of Schaumberg. "As for me the die is cast. I equally despise the favour and fury of Rome, I have no longer any wish to be connected with or reconciled to them. Let them condemn me and burn my books, and if I do not in return publicly condemn and burn the whole pontifical code, it will only be from want of fire." In fact, on the tenth of December 1520, in the presence of an immense concourse of people of all ranks, he committed the Bull of Leo, the decretals of the Pontiffs and other similar documents to the flames, in testimony of his everlasting separation from the Romish Communion. Nor did he neglect to use the pen as well as the torch, by which he appealed from the Pope to a general council, and exposed the pretensions and corruption of the church of Rome in several tracts. A second Bull was issued against him in the month of January 1521, in which the Pope styles himself "the divinely appointed dispenser of spiritual and temporal punishments:" it consisted of a recapitulation of the preceding Bull, and a formal excommunication of Luther.

During these transactions the Elector Frederic acted with a prudence and discretion which proved eminently serviceable to the Reformation. Had he been less the friend of Luther and of truth, he would have delivered him up to his enraged adversaries; had he been more zealous it would have been equally fatal by exposing himself to the papal anathemas, and the infant cause, which he secretly and therefore effectually patronized, to almost inevitable destruction. His conduct and character cannot be more accurately depicted than in the words of Melancthon. "This most excellent prince was much concerned to foresee the contests and disorders which would ensue, though the first attacks made by Luther were upon very plausible grounds. By his own judgment and sagacity, and by long experience in the art of government, he well knew the danger of revolutions. But being a truly religious man and one who feared God, he consulted not the dictates of mere worldly and political wisdom, which might have inclined him to stifle at once all symptoms of innovation. He determined to prefer the glory of God to all other considerations, and to listen to the divine command which enjoins obedience to the gospel. He knew that it was a horrible profaneness to resist the truth when plainly seen and known. He had studiously examined Luther's works, and accurately weighed his proofs and testimonies; and he would not suffer doctrines to be oppressed and smothered which he judged to be the word of God. The Holy Spirit confirmed and supported him in these excellent resolutions, so that though the Emperors Maximilian and Charles, and the Roman Pontiffs urged this prince, and not without menaces, to hinder Luther from writing and preaching in his dominions, he was not in the least degree shaken or intimidated. Yet he presumed not to rely entirely on his own judgment in a matter of such great importance, but took the advice of other persons who were venerable for their rank, learning, and experience.”

After the death of Maximilian I. the unanimous vote of the electoral College placed Charles V. upon the imperial Throne, who was publicly crowned at Aix-la-Chapelle, on the twenty-third of October 1520, the year after his election. (c) Leo immediately applied to him to inflict an exemplary punishment on Luther for disobedience to papal authority, while Frederic exerted his influence, an influence derived from the personal obligations of Charles who had been created Emperor chiefly through his exertions, to obtain a public and fair investigation of his cause in Germany previous to the promulgation of any condemnatory edict. The result was that the Emperor appointed a diet at Worms in January 1521, to which under the protection of a safe conduct Luther repaired in April.

His friends recollecting the fate of John Huss were extremely apprehensive, and would have dissuaded him from venturing amongst his enemies. Their fears increased as he approached the city. Every argument was used to prevent his perseverance and when at Oppenheim he was met by Bucer, (d) who had been sent to

(c) ROBERTSON'S Hist. of Charles V.

(d) Martin Bucer was born at Shelestadt in Alsace. He spent several days with Luther at Worms and embraced his entreat him to take refuge in a neighbouring castle; upon which occasion he uttered that heroic and most characteristic declaration which both Protestant and Papist historians have recorded: "I am lawfully called to appear in the city of Worms, and thither will I go in the name of the Lord, though as many devils as there are tiles on the houses were there combined against me."

At this crisis Melancthon thus expresses himself in a letter to one of his friends. "Martin still lives and prospers notwithstanding the indignation and fury of Leo, to whom all things have hitherto been supposed possible. Nobody approves the Bull which Eckius is enforcing, unless it be those who are more concerned for their own ease and indulgence than for the success of the gospel. We are certainly in no danger from it at present though the hierarchy raves and thunders. O that you knew with what trembling hesitation this pontifical mandate is executed, for its abettors are in a complete strait betwixt the general opinion on the one hand and the anger of the Roman Pontiff on the other, opinions. He afterwards preached the doctrines of the Reformation at Strasberg and was extremely active in endeavouring to reconcile the Lutherans and Zuinglians. In the year 1549 Archbishop Cranmer invited him to England, and he became a lecturer in Divinity in the University of Cambridge, where he died in 1551, at the age of sixty-one.

while there are many who would rather be openly accused of any crime than appear to be deficient in religious zeal for the Pope. You are doubtless acquainted with the proceedings at Worms, though I may say a word or two on that subject. Charles is constantly urged to proscribe Luther by an imperial edict, and there are great deliberations and debates about it. If the Papists could prevail, in their rage they would destroy us, and they are vexed at the inefficiency of the pontifical decrees. They are in hopes that those which they are using every means, but I trust in vain, to extort from the emperor, will prove availing. Nothing can terrify Martin Luther, who would willingly purchase the advancement and glory of the gospel AT THE PRICE OF HIS BLOOD.” (e)

Private conferences and public examinations, violent threats and gentle entreaties, were alternately employed to cajole or to force him into a recantation of his heretical opinions and a submission to the Roman Pontiff. It was all in vain. He was neither to be compelled nor seduced into compliance. He COULD suffer death, but he COULD NOT violate the dictates of conscience! The wonder is, that when his enemies were so inveterate and himself so intrepid and resolute, he should have been allowed to depart from Worms in peace ; but the members of the Diet refused to expose themselves to the reproach of a violation of faith, and the Emperor was unwilling to contend with them from political motives. Luther was allowed twenty one days to return home, and required not to preach to the people in the course of his journey. A few days after he had withdrawn, an edict was issued by the authority of the Diet in the Emperor's name, declaring him a member cut off from the church, a schismatic, a notorious and obstinate heretic ; forbidding all persons, under penalty of high treason, loss of goods, and being put under the BAN of the Empire, to receive, defend, maintain or protect him, either in word or writing ; and all his adherents, followers, and favourers to suffer the confiscation of their property, unless they had left his party, and had received absolution by apostolic authority ! (f)

(e) Ep. 5, ad Hessum.

The formidable edict of Worms however was in a great measure superseded by two circumstances, namely, the multiplicity of the Emperor's engagements arising out of commotions in Spain, and the wars of Italy and the Low Countries ; and a curious, but well concerted and well timed contrivance of his wary friend the Elector of Saxony. Foreseeing the meditated attack upon Luther, Frederic employed several trusty persons in masks to seize upon him as he was passing a forest in Thuringia, near Altenstein, and convey him to the castle of Wartenberg which was situated on a high mountain in the vicinity of Eisenach. (g) The consequence of this sudden disappearance was unfavourable to his adversaries who were suspected of having plotted his destruction, the Imperial Edict missed its aim, and his opinions—or rather, “The word of the Lord grew, and was multiplied.” (h)

(f) DUPIN'S Eccles. Hist. B. 2. Ch. 10.

Luther's confinement in the castle of Wartenberg, placed Melancthon at the head of the reformed cause, who was well aware of the responsibility of his situation. After a considerable lapse of time he writes to his friend Hess; “I feel the need I have of good advice. Our Elijah is still confined at a distance from us, though we are expecting and anticipating his return. What shall I say more? His absence absolutely torments me.” (i) Though there was indeed an alloy of constitutional timidity, (g) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. 1. Sect. 44. p. 152. In his retreat he passed for a country gentleman, under the assumed name of Yonker George.

(h) ACTS xii. 24.

(i) The expression is very strong, and shews the agitated state of his mind. “Me desiderium ejus excruciat miserè,” Ep. 7. ad Hessum.

which cannot but be considered as some depreciation of his sterling value in the peculiar situation of ecclesiastical affairs, no one was so well qualified to maintain the respectability and promote the success of the Lutheran cause. The great Reformer well knew his extraordinary merit, and requested him to assist in the discharge of some of those clerical duties for which he was incapacitated by absence. In one of his letters he addresses him thus: "For the glory of the word of God and the mutual consolation of myself and others, I would rather be consumed in a blazing fire, than remain here half alive and utterly useless. If I perish, the gospel of Christ will not perish, and you, I hope, like another Elisha, will succeed Elijah." Again he writes, "The accounts which I receive of your abundant success in religion and learning during my absence, rejoice my heart exceedingly and very much diminish the miseries of separation. The circumstance of your going on so prosperously while I am absent, is peculiarly delightful to me, because it may serve to convince the wicked one, that however he may rage and foam, their desires shall perish and Christ will finish the work which he has begun." (k)

Melancthon was constitutionally hypochon-

(k) LUTH. Ep. 235, and 243.

driacal; and as even trifling circumstances frequently disturb the peace of such persons, it was to be expected that the state of things at this momentous crisis would produce a powerful effect upon his mind. His heart was interested in the cause of pure Christianity, his happiness was deeply involved in it, his sensibilities were perpetually wrought upon by surrounding occurrences, and his spirits ebbed and flowed according to the success or decline of that cause which was to him the dearest upon earth. In fact the situation of Melancthon and the friends of the Reformation was peculiarly afflictive. The transactions at Worms and the subsequent concealment of Luther had inspired Frederic with an unusual degree of caution amounting to timidity, in his proceedings. The writings of Luther were not allowed to be published and the academicians were interdicted the discussion of questions likely to offend persons of distinction, who were attached to Popery. That Luther deeply sympathized with his friend and participated in his sentiments, is obvious from his own words. "I sit here in my Patmos, reflecting all the day on the wretched condition of the church. I bemoan the hardness of my heart, that I am not dissolved in tears on this account. May God have mercy upon us!" It would however be flagrantly unjust to impute the strong sensation of either of these exalted characters to pusillanimity. Though much distressed, they fully coincided in the principles recognized in another of Luther's epistles—"The peace and approbation of God is ever to be preferred to the peace and approbation of the world. In all circumstances we ought to adhere strictly to the simple word of God and not merely when that word happens to thrive and be respected among men. Let those who please take against us. But why are we to be always looking on the dark side of things? why not indulge hopes of better times?"

At length these bosom friends contrived a mode of alleviating the anxiety that was so intolerable and of obtaining each other's assistance in the present crisis. This was a secret visit of Luther to Wittemberg, which was hastened by the prevalence of various evils, especially the conduct of Carlostadt, which will be noticed in a subsequent page. He states the circumstance to Spalatine: "I came to Wittemberg and amongst the delightful intercourse enjoyed with my friends, I found this bitter, that my little pamphlets and letters had neither been heard of nor seen, for which you shall judge, whether I was not justly displeased. However, on the whole, what I have seen and heard has afforded me the greatest satisfaction. May the Lord comfort those who are interested in the cause: but on my way I was vexed with the various rumours I heard of the imprudences of some of our friends and I propose to publish some suitable exhortation as soon as I return to my asylum. Commend me to our illustrious prince, from whom I wish to conceal my journey to Wittemberg, for a reason of which you are aware. Farewell. I am in Amsdorff's house with my beloved friend Philip Melancthon." (l)

In England Henry VIII. published a book against Luther and in defence of the seven sacraments of the Romish Church, for which he received the title never yet relinquished by his successors, of Defender of the Faith. In France, the Divines of the Sorbonne (m) published a formal condemnation of Luther's writings (dated the 15th of April, 1521), in which they show the danger to which Christians are exposed from his poisonous errors, and charge him with rashness in preferring his own judgment to that of the Universities and Holy Fathers of the Church, as though God had given him the knowledge of many truths necessary for

(l) LUTH. Ep. 253.

(m) The term applied to the faculty of Theology at Paris. The College of the University in which they assembled was called the house of the Sorbonne, which was first erected and endowed in the year 1250, by a wealthy favourite of St. Lewis, whose name was Robert de Sorbonne. This Theological Society was, at that period, in the highest repute.

salvation, which the Church had been ignorant of during past ages, being left by Jesus Christ her spouse in the darkness of error. (n)

Melancthon immediately gave them a very suitable flagellation in a small piece, entitled “Adversus furiosum Parisiensium Theologastorum decretum pro Luthero apologia;” or, “An Apology for Luther, in opposition to the furious decree of the Parisian Theologasters.” (o) This, we may be certain, was gratifying to his friend Yonker George, in confinement at Wartenberg. “I have seen,” says he, “the Decree of the Parisian Sophists, together with the Apology of Philip, and from my very heart I rejoice: for Christ would not have given them up to such blindness had not he determined to promote his own cause, and to put a stop to the despotism of its adversaries.” (p)

In this satirical pamphlet Melancthon begins by remarking, that, “during the past year, the Sophists of Cologne and Louvain condemned the Gospel, in a set of naked propositions, (n) DUFIN'S Eccles. Hist. B. 2 ch. 11.

(o) A term of ridicule as we speak of a poetaster, willing, &c.

(p) LUTH. Ep. 236, ad Spalat. Lib. 1. Luther is not quite so delicate in his epithets when writing familiarly to Melancthon on the subject; for he does not scruple, in conformity to the fashionable language of the age on controversial occasions, to call these Parisian doctors, asses and madmen.

unsupported by either Reason or Scripture, and that now the Parisian Divines had acted in the same irrational manner. By the spirit which pervades the Decree it may be determined whether it is from God, who is not the author of malice, or from another quarter! It appeared almost incredible that such a work should have proceeded from such a University, distinguished as it had been by remarkable men, and especially by the great and pious Gerson. (g) A letter was prefixed to the Decree which he supposed must have been written by some hired declaimer, because it displayed such womanish violence, that it was to be sure too silly for a divine! What does it contain? ‘Oh! Luther is a Manichæan! a Montanist! he despises us forsooth!—he is mad!—he must be brought to his senses by fire and flames!’ What feminine, what monkish weakness!

“Luther is accused of heresy, not because he differs from SCRIPTURE, but from the Holy Fathers, Councils, and Universities, whose opinions are received as the first principles of religion!! But are Holy Fathers, and Councils, and Universities to decree the articles of Christian faith?—And how can this be the case, when they are so liable to err, Occam himself being judge, if you will not credit me? Is our faith to depend upon the opinions of men?—So did not Paul determine when he affirmed, that ‘other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ.’ (r)

(g) Vid. Appendix V.

“Luther then does not dissent from SCRIPTURE, but from YOUR judgment, and from the sense which the Fathers, Councils, and Schools have adopted; and this I see is the great cause of the controversy, and the great sin he has committed! But what after all is decreed by the Councils, when some things are false and some true, some conformable to Scripture, and some contrary to it; so that Scripture must be the final appeal, and if any passages be obscure, they are to be compared with others, and thus Scripture will explain itself. ‘If an Angel from Heaven,’ says the Apostle, ‘preach any other gospel than what I preach let him be accursed.’ (s) Surely then Luther may oppose the obvious sentiment of Scripture to Councils, Fathers, and Universities! What can these Sophists reply? What sort of logic and what kind of glosses can they use to avoid the inference from these statements? Either deny that there is any certain sense in Scripture, or acknowledge that Luther is justifiable in placing its dictates in opposition to human opinion.

(r) 1 COR. iii. 11.

(s) GAL. i. 10.

“ After all he is not inclined to concede that Luther and the ancient Fathers and Councils disagree. On various points he is completely supported by the sentiments of Augustine, Cyprian, Hilary, and Chrysostom; though it is true many things are to be found in the writings of Luther on the Sacraments, vows and other subjects, which cannot be discovered in them. No wonder, for that age knew nothing of the tyrannical laws of Roman Pontiffs, nothing of our Parisian Masters and their articles of faith. That period may, perhaps, be considered as the noon-day of evangelical truth; ours as the declining evening in which darkness covers the minds of sinners as a punishment for their guilt; and that is darkness indeed in which the Sorbonne divinity prevails, a divinity which extols human opinion as paramount to Scriptural Truth! Does not the spirit of God, by his prophets, threaten such a punishment, and does not Paul speak of those who should teach for doctrines the commandments of men?—and to whom can he refer but—to the Sorbonne Divines, or such as they? ”

“ Nay more, whatever criminality may be supposed to attach to any persons for opposing the Fathers, is to be charged upon these very Parisian disputants themselves, who diametrically contradict them. The very best of the Fathers denounce whatever is not from the spirit of Christ, as sinful; but these not only do not allow of their guilt, but absolutely affirm many of them to be meritorious. The Fathers deny that mere human strength is adequate to fulfil the divine law, these Parisians state the very reverse.

“ It is written, if an offender refuse to hear the church let him be as a heathen man and a publican. I pray now what do you call the church? No doubt, the French, or Sorbonne Church. But how can that be the church of Christ which has not the word of Christ, who testifies that his sheep hear his voice? We denominate that his true church which is built upon THE WORD OF GOD, and which is nourished, fed and governed by it; in a word, which derives every thing and judges of every thing, by THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST, for “ he that is of God heareth the words of God.”

Again, “ You, the Sorbonne Church, without appealing to Reason or Scripture, condemn Luther and exclude him from the communion of the pious. But it did not become you to condemn, but to accuse. You do not accuse or convince by argument, but contrary both to divine and human laws, at once condemn, and for no other reason than because you are the Sorbonne divines and lords of our faith to be sure! Forshame! forshame!!! But stay, I must not treat the Sorbonne so irreverently! for these lords over our faith say they imitate the example of the Apostles, when they issue decisions without Scriptural authority. I wish, however, they would verify this statement by some reference. Christ himself quotes the authority of Scripture. Paul does the same; and what are all the apostolic discourses but the testimonies derived from the records of the Old Testament concerning Christ? The Sorbonne only is to be believed without SCRIPTURE!

“ He imagines this fraternity must be of Egyptian origin, and the descendants of Jannes and Jambres who resisted Moses. The truth of the Lutheran doctrines, however, he is satisfied will remain immoveable and unshaken, not only by their opposition, but in spite of the rulers of darkness.”

Soon after the publication of this performance a mock answer appeared in the name of the Parisian Divines, written in a ludicrous style and intended to make them appear ridiculous. Dupin imputes it to Luther, and Seckendorf expresses a doubt whether it were written by him or some other friend.

Another controversial piece of the present year, under the feigned name of Didymus Faventinus, against Thomas Placentinus, and on behalf of Luther, is to be attributed to Melancthon. (t) It consists of forty-four folio pages. In this performance he details the history of the Lutheran controversy, and refutes the various calumnies of the enemies of truth and the reformation. "Luther," says he, "is most iniquitously condemned for having delivered his country from the papal impositions, for daring to eradicate the errors of so many centuries, and restoring to the light pure Christianity which had been nearly extinguished by the impious decrees of the Popes, and the vain sophistries of the schoolmen. I am both suspected Emser to be the writer, but Echard seems to have furnished sufficient evidence of their having been mistaken.

(t) Placentinus or Rhadinus had written against Luther and Melancthon; (Comp. MELANCTH. Ep. 5, 6. ad Hessum.)

"De his orationibus (scil. Rhadini) sciendum Lutherum cum primum accepisset, eam ab Hieronymo Emsero scriptam credidit: itaque Melancthon pro Luthero reposuit sub ficto Didymi Faventini nomine, quod Radino causam præbuit alterius edendæ. Sic enim Johannes Cochleus rerum testis Philippica VII. ad Carolum V. p. 553 narrat: Quanta est enim, inquit, procacitas hujus Phillippi in ea oratione, quam edidit contra Rhadinum Placentinum sub ficto nomine Didymi Faventini, &c. Et ad ann. 1525 de scriptis & actis Martini Lutheri ageus p. 112. Nam cum doctissimus eorum Philippus Melancthon antea respondisset accusationi, quam Thomas Rhadinus Todesco Placentinus vir eloquens ac theologus gravissime simul et eruditissime in Lutherum ad principes Germaniæ scripserat, ille autem falso putasset a Hieronymo Emsero scriptam fuisse, a Rhadino illo ita repulsus est altera oratione, ut contra ne mutire quidem auderet, &c." not alone in ascribing this merit to Luther; the learned universally do the same: and I state this lest you should imagine that he is the sole author of the present commotions, which ought rather to be imputed to those who have done nothing else during the past three years than plot the destruction of Luther. Do not suppose their object is the peace of the Christian community—no—it is solely that they might be able to tyrannize completely over it.”

QUET. et ECHARD. Scriptores Ordinis Prædicatorum recensiti, Tom. 2 p. 74, 75.

Rhadinus, in his declamatory publication, banters Luther, telling him that he ought to feel himself very much obliged to his friend Philip Melancthon, for taking the pains to polish up his writings and enable him to cut a better figure than he would in his own barbarous style: and censures him for discountenancing liberal studies. “Luther,” replies Melancthon, “is no enemy to Mathematics and Natural Philosophy. He thinks the study of coins, plants, and the habits of animals, conducive to the knowledge of the sacred writings, and ought to be encouraged in the Academy. He approves authors of this class which we use, as Pliny, Athenæus, and, if you please, Aristotle, Theophrastus, Dioscorides, not to mention the poets.”

After exposing the errors of the scholastic divinity, both in metaphysics and in morals,

“with prodigious force of argument and fluency of language,” (u) and discussing a variety of other topics, he proceeds to the subject of grace. “Philosophers imagine that men may obtain the highest pitch of virtue by exercise and habit; on the contrary the sacred writings teach that all human performances are polluted by sin, and can be cleansed only by the Spirit which Christ procured for men. Philosophers attribute every thing to human power; but the sacred writings represent all moral power as lost by the fall. The Scholastics, in imitation of the Philosophers who ascribed the merit and the goodness to human power, affirmed that the Spirit was delighted to dwell with us after this self-created excellence, but not to transform or purify the soul by his agency. Who does not perceive how the truth of Christ is obscured and lost by this statement; this utter rejection of the scriptural representations of the Spirit as the author of sanctification and of every thing good in man; and this shameless, this arrogant assumption of human merit? Hence have originated those endless disputes respecting offerings, rewards, and cardinal virtues, in which every thing is attributed to human nature, and nothing to Christ.

(u) “Magno pondere argumentorum & verborum flumine.”

“ The terms grace, faith, hope and charity, are so abused, that they have quite a different meaning in the sacred writings from that which is given them in the controversies of scholastic divines, so that we have not only lost the doctrine, but the very language of Christianity. Grace, denotes the favour of God through Christ—but where does it ever signify, as they assert, a form of soul? Whence originated the terms faith infused or acquired, formed and unformed? What is their authority for teaching that Christian minds must hope for salvation from human merits? Whence indeed is this profane, impious and arrogant word, merit?

“ The church, ye Princes, appeals to your faith and piety, that, enslaved as she has hitherto been by vain philosophy and human traditions, you would at length emancipate her from her wretched state, her Babylonian servitude!”

He complains bitterly of the state of the Universities, and entreats the different Princes to use their utmost exertions to procure that reform which was so essentially requisite. “ The youth, the most tender and susceptible part of the community, are perishing in luxury, gluttony and excess. And what are they likely to do with such masters? And if they should have a diligent tutor, what will it avail if he cannot instruct them, or only in the most sparing manner, in sacred wisdom? For it is in vain you attempt to govern the youthful mind unless you arm it, by evangelical truth and holy example, against the lusts of the flesh, the influence of the world and the machinations of Satan.

“ Every one of the ancient Republics paid the greatest possible attention to the instruction of their youth ; we, we only, who are denominated Christians, totally disregard and despise this, which is of all others the most important object. O ye Princes, if no other consideration affect your minds, at least compassionate the situation of our youth, who are ruined by the wickedness of others ! I have seen some of them by no means ill disposed, who would however rather continue in ignorance of letters, than purchase knowledge at so dear a rate ; and who carried away nothing from the Universities but a wounded conscience.”

It is needless to quote any of those passages which are merely controversial, though in themselves witty, and at the time extremely necessary. Poor Rhadinus published a reply in the following year full of feeling and furnishing ample proof that Melancthon had trod upon a snake.

Amongst the “ Select Declamations,” we find one of the present year on a subject which Melancthon was peculiarly qualified to discuss. It is entitled, “ Adhortatio ad Christianæ

Doctrinæ, per Paulum Proditæ, Studium;” or, An Exhortation to the Study of Christian Truth, as stated by the apostle Paul. After shewing the superiority of Paul’s doctrine, and the institutions of Christianity to human laws, and of Paul’s eloquence to that of the most celebrated orators of antiquity, he concludes with the following solemn appeal: “ If, O ye youths, you have any concern for your own best interests, devote your minds to the study of Paul. Inform yourselves from him of the genuine principles of the Christian life, the true means of religious consolation, and the estimate to be formed of all divine and human things. It concerns youth especially to embrace a doctrine of preeminent importance, as conducive to the felicity of man in his passage through the present life, and in prospect of departure from it. Paul instructs you how to live holily and to die happily, by warning the unwary of the snares which their formidable adversaries the flesh and the devil, have prepared for their ruin. You may without moral danger neglect other arts and studies, but it is impossible to despise the truth of the gospel, without sacrificing the hope of salvation. It becomes bishops to use their utmost endeavours, not only to see that those particularly devoted to sacred studies are well instructed, but to promote this knowledge throughout the whole Christian community; and it is incumbent on the Academies to inculcate it with the greatest zeal, and substitute it for that barbarism and disputation falsely called Philosophy, which our ancestors unhappily sanctioned. If it please God the brass shall become gold.

“ It is with the deepest affliction of mind I observe that our public seminaries are nothing but the temples of Tophet, and the gloomy valley of the children of Hinnom. Christianity is banished. Athens had its Areopagus, and Sparta its School, where youth were trained up after the very best models, and were better instructed by these heathens than they are in our Universities at this day. But do you yourselves, ye studious youth, seriously undertake the diligent study of St. Paul’s writings, where Christ Jesus is evidently set forth, and his Spirit will unquestionably prosper your endeavours. No service is more acceptable to God, and no conduct can be more pious and praiseworthy than to aim at truth, and to acquire its transforming influence; and being once attempted, the labour will become so delightful that it will never be relinquished. The knowledge of any truth is pleasant, but the knowledge of Christian truth is singularly beneficial, and you will find the writings of Paul both agreeable and useful.

“ It is said that the Egyptians, a people unexampled for superstition, kept an annual festival in honour of Mercury, the reputed author of their laws and literature, on which occasion the multitude were accustomed to offer sacrifices of honey and figs. This rite proves the antiquity of the festival; for in the golden age, as it is called, almost all public entertainments and feasts were of a sacrificial nature, and honey and figs the most usual offerings to the gods, of which there is ample evidence. In the midst of these public solemnities the voice of melody was heard in a hymn to Mercury, neither rudely composed nor badly recited. It expressed the grateful sense they cherished of his having given them laws and formed a variety of institutions, and celebrated the praise of truth in general. May I not indulge the hope that the discovery of truth by the study of Paul, will excite similar sensations and strains of festive joy? for what can be more just and proper than that after being instructed in the best and most important knowledge, the burden of our song should be as their's constantly was γαλυὲ ἡ ἀληθεια, "O lovely truth!"

The "LOCI COMMUNES THEOLOGICI," or "Theological Common Places," which was first published at Wittemberg in 1521, demands, on account of its magnitude and subsequent celebrity, a particular notice. None of the works of Melancthon, and scarcely any amongst the numerous productions of his illustrious contemporaries, excited greater attention, or circulated to a wider extent. It was very popular both in France and Italy. At Venice, it was published under the name of Messer Philippo de Terra Nera, (x) and was extensively read. Not a syllable of disapprobation was expressed, till one Cordelier, who had read the work as it was first published, with the author's real name affixed, gave information to the inquisitors, who though they approved, or at least did not censure it, as the writing of Philippo de Terra Nera, instantly suppressed it as the production of Philip Melancthon! (y)

“He that intends to be a good divine,” says Luther, “hath a great advantage; for, first, he hath the Bible, which I have so plainly translated out of the Hebrew into the High German language, that every one may read it without difficulty. Afterwards he may read the Loci Communes of Philip Melancthon; and let him read with diligence, so that he may have it perfectly in his memory. When he has these two pieces, then he is a divine, against whom neither the devil, nor any heretic can be able to take advantage, for the whole of divinity lies open to him, so that he may read what and when he will for his edification.” Again, “ we find no book where the sum of religion or divinity is more finely compacted together than in Melancthon’s Loci Communes ; all the Fathers and Sententiarum are not to be compared to it. It is the best book next to the holy Scriptures. (z)

(x) PHILIPPO DE TERRA NERA is the Italian rendering of his name: Gumanicè Schwartzerd, Græcè Melancthon.

(y) HERMANNI VAN DER HARDT Hist. Literar. Reformationis. P. IV. p. 30. DUPIN Eccles. Hist. Cent. 17, T. I. p. 220.

The first editions of this publication were not complicated like the succeeding ones with large discussions and illustrations which the prevalence of controversy induced its author afterwards to believe necessary. To meet the reasonings and obviate the objections of the Catholic writers, Melancthon continually republished it with enlargements, but without any material change of its principles.

In the dedication of this work to Henry VIII.

(z) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 298. “ Cumque in hoc nostra versetur oratio,” says a friend and pupil of Luther and Melancthon and professor of Theology at Tubingen, “ et magnus sit horum locorum usus, atque in omnium ferè manibus versentur, non possum præterire, quin judicium Domini Doctoris Martini Lutheri de illis recitem. Spero enim non fore auditoribus ingratum.

Adeo autem honorificè de illis sensit, ut dixerit, Non extare ullum aliud præstantius post Apostolica Scripta, locis D. Philippi ; ideoque in Ecclesia et Scholis retinendum, quia in eo doceat, pugnet et triumphet, ac totum corpus cælestis doctrinæ complectatur. Nec in omnibus omnium patrum scriptis, tantum reperiri eruditionis Theologicæ, quantum in locis hisce contineatur. Etsi omnia illorum scripta conflarentur, non tamen inde locos Philippi prodituros. HEERBRAND. Orat. Funeb. in obitum Melancthi. habita in Acad. Tubing. 1560.

the author states the motives which influenced him to prepare it, and they are such as cannot fail to secure the approbation of every pious mind. In order to secure the great purpose of utility, he represents himself as avoiding all questions of mere curiosity, and expresses his characteristic abhorrence of the intricacies of controversy as tending rather to perplex than instruct the mind. (a)

To an edition published in French, at Geneva, in the year 1551, the illustrious John Calvin has prefixed an advertisement, in which he eulogizes the author in the strongest terms: and of the Common Places in particular he very justly remarks, “it is a summary of those truths which are essential to the christian’s guidance in the way of salvation.” A very cursory analysis of the sentiments contained in this celebrated performance is all the reader can expect or would deem admissible. The edition used is that of 1536. (b)

(a) “Cum in docendo magnopere prosit tenere summas rerum ordine et ratione distributas & in methodum contractas, collegi et ego præcipuos locus doctrinæ christianæ, eosque quos arbitrabar maximè ad pietatem alendam conducere et in vita, et in exercitiis piorum usum habere, denique qui extare in ecclesiis et in concionibus inculcari maximè debent. Ac non solum curiosas et inutiles quæstiones præcidi ac fugi, sed etiam in reliquis locis, quos explicandos esse putavi, optima fide ac simplicitate sine sophistica, res ipsas quantum potui exposui. Nam et ipse abhorreo, ut qui maxime à præstigiis illis disputationum, quæ cum multa colligunt inextricabilia, perplexa, paradoxa, absurda, prodigiosa, tantum perturbant conscientias, non docent.”

OF GOD.

“ The human mind, originally formed in the image of God, and capable of knowing him, is, however, in consequence of sin, enveloped in darkness, and can scarcely of itself determine whether there be a God or a Providence. Although nature is every where marked with traces of the Divinity, and with evidences of his interference in human affairs, such is the weakness of man, that he is full of doubt and hesitation on the subject. It is, therefore, a proof of divine goodness to enlighten and instruct us by his word.

“ God is a spiritual essence, possessing eternity and the attributes of power, wisdom, goodness, justice and mercy, in an infinite degree, which are not separable from himself, or incompatible in their operations. The unity of God is stated in the following passages : “ Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord.’—‘ I am the first, and I am the last, and besides me there is no God.’—‘ I am the Lord and there is none else, there is no God beside me.’—‘ We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and there is

(b) Vid. Appendix VI.

none other God but one.’—‘One God and Father of all.’ (c)

“The scriptures teach us, however, that the essence of God consists in three persons, infinite and co-eternal, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit.

“The SON is denominated by John the LOGOS OR WORD. In the epistle to the Hebrews he is called ‘the brightness of the Father’s glory, and the express image of his person;’ and ‘all things’ are said to have been ‘made by him.’ In the Colossians he is termed ‘the image of the invisible God.’ (d)

“The third person, or HOLY SPIRIT, is represented by John as proceeding from the Father and the Son. The Son, at the predestined period of time, assumed human nature and was born of the Virgin Mary. He was THE CHRIST, one person consisting in two natures, the divine and the human. Neither the Father nor the Spirit assumed human nature, but the Son.

“The doctrine of the Trinity is supported by Scripture. In the last chapter of Matthew mention is made of ‘baptizing in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit.’

(c) DEUT. vi. 4. IS. xliv. 6. IS. xlv. 5. I COR. viii. 4. EPH. iv. 6.

(d) HEB. i. 3. JOHN i. 3. COL. i. 15.

Three persons are here distinctly named, and each is assigned an equal power and honour. The appeal or invocation is made to each, and so as to imply an equal authority.

“ Christ must have been possessed of a divine nature, or it would not be proper to adore and invoke him. And the adoration, as stated in various passages, was not merely external, as we bow before kings and potentates, because omnipotence is attributed to him, and John affirms, ‘ in the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and the word WAS GOD.’ (e)

A copious variety of passages is here quoted from the Old and New Testaments, in proof of prayer and other acts of worship being presented to Christ, and the opinions of the Arians and Socinians are opposed by arguments and quotations from the fathers.

In speaking of the HOLY SPIRIT, Melancthon remarks, that “ the general signification of the term spirit is motion, either natural, or by means of external impulse ; but it is used in a variety of senses by the prophets and apostles, which must not be absurdly confounded together. Often it means the wind, the life of man, and the various movements of passion good or bad. In the phrase ‘ God is a spirit,’ it signifies a spiritual essence, or a pure incorporeal intelligence. It is applied to the Father, but not to him only, and it is requisite to distinguish those places where it refers to the Holy Spirit, whose office is to sanctify and animate the soul."

(e) JOHN i. 1.

The divinity and personality of the Holy Spirit are then maintained in a series of explanatory remarks on his appearance at the Baptism of Christ in the form of a dove, and on the day of Pentecost; and on a variety of passages commonly recited in the Trinitarian controversy.

THE CREATION.

"All creatures are the workmanship of God; angels, men, and every other existence and substance. They were created from nothing, for 'by the word of the Lord were the heavens made, and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.' (f)

"If all things were made by the word of the Lord, they were not formed, as the stoics imagined, from matter antecedently existing. And as God created, so he perpetually sustains all things and all beings. The fertility of the earth year after year, and the perpetuation of human life are to be attributed to what is called his general operations. 'In him we live and move and have our being.' 'Who upholds all things by the word of his power.' 'He giveth life to all flesh.' 'Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing, and not one of them shall fall to the ground without your father. Even the very hairs of your head are all numbered.' 'All wait on thee that thou mayest give them their meat in due season.' 'He covereth the heavens with clouds, he prepareth rain for the earth, he maketh grass to grow upon the mountains.'(g)

(f) Ps. xxxiii. 6.

"A variety of special promises have been given to the church, relating to the care of a superintending providence, and are to be found in every part of the scriptures. The prayer which our Saviour directs us to present, 'give us this day our daily bread,' intimates our constant dependance, so that second causes cannot operate or avail us unless God give them efficiency.

"Other proofs of this subject might be adduced; as, first, the order of nature, that is to say, a series of effects, shewing an agent and cause. The regularity of these operations, as the course of the heavenly bodies, the succession of animals, and of the various productions of the earth, and the course of rivers, demonstrate they are not accidental coincidences, but resulting from an intelligent agent. Secondly, the nature of the human mind: what is devoid of intelligence cannot produce it, but the human mind possesses intelligence, and since each derives his being from another, the original being must be an intelligent one. Thirdly, the distinction between virtue and vice, and the varieties of knowledge. It is not possible these should exist in the human soul without an adequate cause and by mere accident. Fourthly, the uniform impression of the truth that there is a God—all acknowledge it. Fifthly, natural conscience: persons guilty of notorious crimes, suffer great alarms of mind, and yet do not apprehend that any punishment will be inflicted by man. They have a certain internal conviction of right and of wrong. Sixthly, the constitution of civil society, which could not be organized and maintained in its various relations, but for the wisdom imparted and the regulations maintained by an eternal Providence. Seventhly, the knowledge which is obtained and can be obtained only by the continuance of efficient causes. These are not infinite, we must therefore recur to a first cause. Eighthly, the existence of final causes.—All things are destined to some use, but this appointment of a suitable end and purpose could not have been fortuitous nor can it continue by chance. It implies a superintending intelligence. Ninthly, prophetic signs and intimations of futurity.

(g) ACTS xvii. 28. HEB. i. 3. MAT. x. 29. PS. civ. 27.
PS. cxlvii. 8.

These are not only such signs as are notorious to the heathen world, but especially particular predictions to the church—often involving the fate of empires, as the predictions of Balaam, Isaiah, Jeremiah and Daniel. A foreseeing mind is necessarily pre-supposed. These considerations demonstrate both the being and the presiding providence of God.

THE CAUSE AND CONSEQUENCE OF SIN.

“ This has been a fruitful subject of disputation, and many great men on both sides have involved themselves in inextricable difficulties and absurdities. Let youth be admonished to lay aside contention, and seek only that simple truth which is conducive to genuine religion and sound morality. All wise men agree in one point, that God is not the author of sin, that he neither desires it nor impels the will to commit sin, but abhors it; but it is to be attributed to the influence of the devil and to the will of man. God when he had created the universe pronounced all very good, and Christ imputes evil to Satan, when he represents him as ‘ a liar and the father of lies.’ The New Testament every where states the same sentiment. ‘ Whosoever committeth sin is of the devil—for the devil sinneth from the beginning,’ that is, the devil was the original author of sin. (h)

“ Such expressions as ‘ I will harden Pharoah’s heart’ do not contradict this representation, because they are mere Hebrew idioms, signifying the permission and not the effectual operation and impulse of the divine mind.

“ The nature of original sin is hence apparent. It is not the original nature which the Deity implanted in man, but the corruption arising from disobedience. God then is not the author of sin, but properly speaking, it arose from the temptation of Satan and the will of man which was created free.

ON THE FREEDOM OF THE HUMAN WILL

“ By the term free will, is to be understood a faculty and power in the human will, to choose or reject whatever is presented to it ; which power was far greater before nature was corrupted, but is now impeded by various means to be hereafter stated. The apostles speak of the heart and the mind, that is, the will and the understanding.

“ Many disputes have been agitated upon this subject, and the grand question is, in what manner can the will be free, or how can it obey the law of God ? This question can only be resolved by considering the magnitude of that sin, or inherent infirmity which is contracted by our very birth, and the requirements of the law of God as extending not only to external obedience, but to that of the whole nature, perpetual and perfect. If the nature of man were not corrupted by sin, its knowledge of God would be more clear and certain; it would be affected with no doubts, but possessing a genuine fear and confidence would render a perfect obedience, that is to say, all the feelings of the soul would harmonize with the divine law like those of holy angels. In consequence of original sin, however, the nature of man is now full of doubts, darkness and error, destitute of true fear and confidence in God, and polluted with vile affections. Hence the question arises, what kind of power does the human will possess? I reply, that since the understanding of man is corrupted, and the choice of those things which are subjected to reason or to sense is perverted, so also is his external and civil obedience.

“ The gospel teaches us that such is the dreadful depravity of nature, that it is totally repugnant to the law of God, so that we cannot obey; and the human will cannot, by any exertion of its own, eradicate this depravity. Such is the blindness of human nature, that we do not even discern this moral infirmity and corruption, for if we did, the reason of our incapacity to satisfy the divine law would be at once apparent. The law requires perfect obedience, but our corrupt nature cannot render it; and it is of this corruption we speak, not in reference to external acts but internal affections and conformity to God, when discoursing on the freedom of the human will.

“ To this let it be added, that without the Holy Spirit we cannot exercise spiritual affections as love to God, faith in his mercy, obedience and endurance in afflictions, delight in him and others of a similar nature. Many passages of Scripture confirm this statement, ‘ As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God.’ If any man have not the Spirit of Christ he is none of his.’ (i) These two are sufficiently obvious, for they distinctly intimate that we can only obey by the grace of the Holy Spirit. To these may be added a multitude of others, as the ‘ natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him, neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned.’— ‘ Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.’— ‘ No man can come to me except the Father which hath sent me draw him.’— ‘ Without me ye can do nothing.’ (k)

“ The question then being proposed respecting spiritual actions, this seems to be the truth which it becomes us to maintain, that without the aid of the Holy Spirit the human will can perform none of those spiritual actions which God requires, namely, the genuine fear of God, faith in his mercy, perfect love, patience in affliction, persevering constancy even to death, of which holy Stephen, Lawrence and Agnes, with innumerable others are illustrious examples.

(i) ROM. viii. 14. ROM. viii. 9.

(k) 1 COR. ii. 14. JOHN iii. 5. JOHN vi. 44. JOHN xv. 5.

ON THE GOSPEL.

“ This term is used in the most ancient of the Greek writers. In Homer it signifies the reward which is bestowed on the messenger of good tidings, and in Aristophanes and Isocrates it denotes the sacrifice which is offered when any good news is announced. In other authors it is used for the message itself, the news communicated, in which sense the apostles have adopted it. Plutarch in the life of Artaxerxes, plainly speaks of the reward of the gospel or good news, for to this the reference is obvious. In the life of Pompey, he says, ‘ the messengers arrived at Pontus bringing the gospel,’ that is, the good and joyful intelligence. Cicero uses it in a similar sense in an epistle to Atticus.

“ Let Christians then learn in the use of this term the delightful nature of this new doctrine, and consider the distinction between the Law and the Gospel. This is very clearly expressed by John, ‘the law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ :’ (m) the distinction is between the commandments and the remission of sins, between gratuitous promises and those of a different description. The law requires perfect obedience to God, by which sins are not gratuitously pardoned, for we are not justified before God, or received into his favour according to its requirements unless we have entirely satisfied its demands. On the contrary, the gospel speaks of repentance and good works, and contains what is indeed its grand and characteristic doctrine, the promise of salvation through Jesus Christ.

“ In Scripture therefore there are two kinds of promises ; the one attaches to the law and includes the condition of the law. For example ; the law proclaims the goodness and mercy of God, but it is to those who are sinless, and human reason inculcates a similar principle. Let every one reflect within himself and he will find that naturally he judges of God in the same manner, namely, that he is merciful, but only to the worthy and virtuous, that is, to those who are without sin ; and cannot be persuaded that they can please God when they are unholy and unworthy. So that as the law and its promises are conditional they leave the Conscience in a state of doubtful anxiety.

“ The other description of promise is peculiar to the gospel not deriving its condition from the law, that is to say, not given upon the condition of fulfilling the law, but gratuitously bestowed for the sake of Christ and including the forgiveness of sin, reconciliation and justification before God. These blessings are certain, and not dependant on the condition of fulfilling the law ; for were we to suppose it necessary, in order to obtain the remission of sins to fulfil the law, we should justly despair. Hence these blessings are freely bestowed, and not as a reward for our worthiness or merit ; not however without a meritorious sacrifice on our behalf, for Christ gave himself for us as a propitiation for our sins, that for his sake we might be accepted of God.

GOOD WORKS.

“ Five questions are proposed :—

1. What good works ought we to do ?—The reply is, summarily, not only external acts of morality, but whatever is commanded by God and comprised within the decalogue.

2. How can we do them ?—By the effectual aid of the Holy Spirit, who can enable us to render an internal and spiritual obedience—a service of the heart to God.

3. In what manner are our good works acceptable to God?—Christians are exceedingly desirous of this, but are at the same time deeply conscious of their imperfections, infirmities, and corruptions, as Paul says, ‘the evil that I would not that I do.’⁽ⁿ⁾ After admitting all this in the fullest extent, the reply is, that notwithstanding all the imperfection and infirmity of the Christian in the present state, and his incapacity to perform that perfect obedience which the divine law requires, he is nevertheless acceptable to God, for the sake of Christ the Mediator, who presents our prayers to the Father as our intercessor, and remits the infirmity and unworthiness of our services. Peter maintains this sentiment, ‘offering spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ.’^(o)

4. For what reasons ought we to perform good works?—Many present themselves, arising first, out of the necessity of duty and the command of heaven, that we do not grieve the Holy Spirit and injure our own consciences or incur punishment; secondly, from a consideration of dignity; not the dignity or merit of our works, but of our character and persons as servants of God; the dignity of our vocation of which the apostle speaks, as the magistrate or minister ought to magnify his office, and to be loyal and diligent in the discharge of it; thirdly, as an evidence and assurance of our reconciliation with God and the enjoyment of a gratuitous pardon through the love of his Son. Such as obey God have the promise of eternal life; ‘Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.’ (p) The Scripture abounds with promises to believers, inclusive of temporal, spiritual, and eternal blessings.

(n) ROM. vii. 19.

(o) 1 PET. ii. 5.

5. What difference exists between the nature of different sins, since it is confessed there are remains of depravity in the most holy of Christians?—Some kinds of sins are sins of infirmity only, sins which the regenerate person resists and abhors; but others are sins against conscience, grace is forfeited, the Holy Spirit grieved, faith lost, that is, the confidence we ought to cherish in the mercy of God. The Apostle Paul says, ‘If ye live after the flesh ye shall die, but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live,’ that is, if ye obey wicked affections ye shall be exposed to the divine displeasure and to eternal death. It is said in the same chapter, ‘As many as are led by the Spirit of God they are the sons of God;’ but such as commit sin against their consciences, grieve and drive away the Spirit of God, for they are no longer the children of God. ‘Be not deceived, neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate shall inherit the kingdom of God.’ John says, ‘He that committeth sin is of the devil.’ (q)

THE KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

“The Gospel plainly teaches us that the kingdom of Christ is spiritual, that is to say, Christ being seated at the right hand of the Father intercedes for us, pardons the sins of his church, and bestows the Holy Spirit on those who believe in him and approach God in his name; whom he sanctifies and will raise again at the last day to everlasting life. And that we may obtain these blessings, the ministry of the Gospel is appointed by which mankind are called to the knowledge of Jesus Christ. But the true church will always suffer persecution from the wicked to the end of time, and in the church itself the good and the evil will continue blended together. It is necessary therefore to reject the old Jewish error revived by the Anabaptists of this age, that in the last times the church will become a worldly empire in which Christians will reign, destroying the wicked by force of arms, and seizing upon all the kingdoms and sovereignties of the earth.

(q) ROM. viii. 13, 14. 1 COR. vi. 9. 1 JOHN iii. 8.

PRAYER.

There is an essential difference between genuine prayer as offered to God by his real church and the prayers of Pagans, Mahometans and Jews. This difference arises from two sources, the one respects the Essence of God of which they form no just conceptions, and the other the means of acceptance with him, namely, by Jesus Christ the Mediator.

“ This subject may be divided into five parts:—

1. In approaching God by prayer, it is requisite to consider WHO and WHAT HE IS to whom we address ourselves. Let us reflect there is no other God, and that from the very commencement of time he has manifested himself to his church by the word of his truth and the Son of his love, Christ our Mediator.

2. Let us remember that prayer is A COMMANDED DUTY. We are not to imagine that murder, theft, adultery, are the only sins; it is one of the greatest of sins, not to render to God that service he demands, not to supplicate his throne, not to depend upon his aid in our necessities, and not to express our gratitude for the blessings we receive.

3. It is proper for a Christian to recur to THE PROMISES, that he may know that God hears and why he hears us, though we are unworthy and merit of ourselves the severest punishments. The promises in their proper order include the remission of sins and reconciliation with God, the communication of all spiritual and all temporal blessings. Inexpressible kindness! Boundless mercy to the church! He commands us to ask mercies, and then adds an ample promise to encourage us to pray! But how surprising is the folly and weakness of the human heart, to draw back instead of approaching God! Nevertheless the innumerable examples and promises of Scripture excite us to dismiss our doubts, to approach God through his beloved Son, and not to imagine that his promises are as the Epicureans suppose, mere idle words. Surely the Divine Being has not given so many indubitable manifestations of himself for no purpose; he has not declared his will in vain; but would have our ignorance and our doubts removed by his word. Taulerus very justly remarks, 'that the mind of man is never so eagerly disposed to pray, but God is still more ready to give.'

4. It is necessary that FAITH should accompany application; for it is for the purpose of encreasing our faith that the promises are given. In reference to spiritual blessings which God has expressly promised, as the remission of sins, deliverance from the dominion of sin, and from eternal death, the gift of the Holy Spirit and eternal life, no condition is subjoined: those who repent of their sins and believe in Christ may rest assured of divine favour. Faith must also mingle with our request for temporal blessings; and we must recollect three things—first, that God is truly the source and dispenser of these favours, that we do not possess them by chance, that we cannot certainly secure them by any personal exertion or diligence; they are absolutely the gifts of God and of him we must solicit life, protection, peace, tranquillity, prosperity in our different callings and bodily health. Secondly, although it is the will of God that his church and people should be subject to afflictions, yet he will certainly bestow temporal good so far as is requisite for their support and preservation. Thirdly, it is the will of God that when we request temporal blessings, our faith in the great reconciliation should be exercised and increased.

5. Let us RENEW AND REPEAT OUR REQUESTS: for it is honourable to the character of God to trust in him continually amidst our diversified afflictions, and to rely upon his hearing those who supplicate his throne.”

The transactions relating to the abolition of private Masses, constitute a very important part of the proceedings of this extraordinary year. It afforded the highest satisfaction to Luther in his retirement to find that the Augustinian Friars at Wittemberg had ventured upon an attempt to abolish the popish mode of celebrating private Masses; but the Elector felt some alarm, and deputed Pontanus, one of his counsellors, to remonstrate with the church and university upon their proceedings. Melancthon was chosen, with five others, Justus Jonas, John Doltz, Andrew Carlostadt, (r) Jerome Schurff, and Nicholas Amsdorff, to investigate the business; and in their report, they not only expressed their approbation of this zeal, but urged the Elector “to put an end to the popish Masses throughout his whole territory, and not to be deterred by the reproaches of those who would brand him with the name of Heretic, or Hussite: this Christ required of the Elector, whose mind he had enlightened with the knowledge of the Truth above all other Princes." The Elector directed Professor Bayer to return an answer, importing, that "he was desirous of acting like a Christian Prince, for the glory of God and the establishment of his gospel, but that he thought nothing ought to be done with precipitation: that the truth would be discovered by others, and he might then undertake the change; and that as many churches and monasteries had been founded for the purpose of saying Masses, it should be considered whether upon their abolition their revenues might not be withheld—but that as he was only a layman, he desired them to consult with the rulers of the church and university, that every thing might be peaceably settled."

(r) He had three names, Andrew Bodenstein Carlostadt; and in allusion to his initials A, B, C, Melancthon frequently designated him by the term Alphabet. “Hic nihil est novi quæ de alphabeto scribis, nonnihil commoverunt. Vereor enim ne vir ille privatam contumeliam, quam putat ulturas novo scandalo causam evangelicam oneret.” Ep. ad Cam. “Tuas literas longiores περι τῶν α, β, accepι.” Ep. p. 2. It was no uncommon practice with Melancthon to amuse himself by punning upon names in his familiar letters: e. g. “Dux Georgius dicitur affuturus intra triduum adducens secum Cochlæum, qui paucis literis mutatis fiet avis κόλοιος, de quo genere nobis scripsisti quàm suaviter in tuâ viciniâ rhetoricentur. Et ut intelligas neutiquam vanum esse Eckius qui geminatus reddit vocem monedularum Ekekekel magnum acervum conclusionum congegessit.” Ep. ad. Luth. Lib. I. 3.

To this they replied in a manner worthy of themselves and of the noble cause in which they were engaged, stating that "they adhered to their former opinion given against private Masses, that they could be abolished as they believed without tumult or scandal; but if not they were instructed by Christ to let them alone, for they are blind leaders of the blind; and by the apostles to obey God rather than men. From the beginning of the world it had always been found that a small proportion of mankind acknowledged the truth, and according to the testimony of Christ himself, the gospel was to be preached to the weak, the few, the despised, and the unlearned; so that it was not surprising that Priests and the wise of this world apprehensive of losing their power, dignity, and other advantages, should not admit the preaching of the truth, or consent to wise and pious changes, unless they were likely to become sources of emolument to themselves. The ancient colleges and monasteries were founded not for the purpose of saying Masses, but for the instruction of youth and the support of the poor: and that, even to the time of Augustine and Bernard. These institutions were only appropriated to Masses within these three or four hundred years, and for the Dead scarcely two hundred. Still they ought to be abolished as errors, even though they could boast of great antiquity. Besides, the very principle on which Masses are celebrated is sinful, namely, that they are good works, sacrifices, or satisfactions for sin. It appeared that even to the time of Cyprian it was the custom to receive the Sacrament in both kinds, and that this practice prevails even to the present day in Greece and the Eastern churches. It was not therefore their fault if tumult should arise; but they were to be censured, who, to keep up their dignity, their income, and their luxury, continue to obstruct the light of truth, and cruelly wage war against the altars of God. Christ predicted and his apostles experienced that the gospel was a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. The Christian rule was neither to regard the madness of the enemy, nor the greatness of the danger. Christ was not silent, though he foresaw the preaching of the gospel would be attended with discord, seditions, and the revolution of kingdoms; nor were his apostles less strenuous in instructing the people, because the wise men of the world detested the very name of the gospel, looking upon it as the firebrand of those disturbances, schisms, and tumults, which raged amongst the Jews at Jerusalem." The result of these communications was, that though the timid Elector refused to give them a public sanction, he connived at these innovations. (s)

The life of Leo X. terminated with the closing year.

(s) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 216.

CHAP. VI.

•••••
 A. D. 1522 TO A. D. 1525.
 •••••

The Anabaptists—Disturbances of Carlostadt—Luther's return to Wittemberg—Account of his German version of the Scriptures, with the assistance of Melancthon and others—Luther's conference with Stubner—His letter of Apology for stealing Melancthon's MS. Copy of his Commentary on the Romans—Extracts from that Commentary—Progress of the Reformation—Rise of the Sacramental Controversy—Death of Muncer—Melancthon's excursion in Germany—Death of Mosellanus—His Epitaph—Melancthon's introduction to the Landgrave of Hesse—Death of Nesenus—His Epitaph—Death of Frederic the Wise—Translated extracts from Melancthon's Funeral Oration—His Epitaph—Luther's Marriage—Controversy with Erasmus—Melancthon's visits to Nuremberg to found an Academy—Translated extracts of his Oration at the opening of the Institution—Publications.

FANATICISM soon made her unwelcome appearance in this season of religious commotion. In the spring of 1522, Nicholas Storck, Martin Cellarius, and Mark Stubner, who had been for some time engaged with the notorious Muncer in propagating the wildest sentiments at Zwickau, in Misnia, came to Wittenberg. The former was a zealous leader of this enthusiastic band. They had harangued the populace in the church of St. Catharine, and pretending to enjoy visions and inspirations from heaven, acquired a very considerable ascendancy over the minds of an ignorant populace. Storck imagined he had seen an angel in a vision, who amongst other things, said he would be elevated to Gabriel's seat, from which Storck supposed that he was to become the head of a new empire. (t)

These persons have been usually designated by the term ANABAPTISTS, on account of their denying the validity of infant baptism; a name sufficiently vague and inappropriate, as this sentiment, even if it were acknowledged to be erroneous, cannot with any candour be classed amongst their fanatical opinions. This epithet is deduced from their representing the office of magistracy as subversive of their spiritual liberty, affirming that civil distinctions, such as rank birth and opulence confer, ought to be abolished, that Christians may enjoy all things in common; and maintaining that they were favoured with visions and revelations from heaven. They branched out into various subdivisions, and some of them approached very nearly to the sentiments of modern Sandemanians. (u)

(t) MELANC. Ep. Lib. IV. 17. ad Joach. Camerar. VAN DE CORPUT Leven ende Dood Phil. Mel. p. 15.

Although it was one of their principles to explode human science, Mark Stubner was a man of some learning, having been a student at the University of Wittemberg. (x) Melancthon, with his characteristic goodness, received and treated him with the utmost hospitality, patiently investigated his pretensions, and scrupulously avoided any precipitancy in his decisions. The state of his mind is obvious from a letter which at this critical juncture he addressed to the Elector. “Your Highness is aware of the great and dangerous dissensions about religion which have distracted your city of Zwickau. Some have been imprisoned for their innovations, and three of the leaders have fled hither, two of them ignorant weavers, the third a man of learning. I have heard their statements; and it is astonishing what they relate of themselves as commissioned from heaven to teach; as having a familiar intercourse with God, and able to foresee future events; in a word, as having the authority of prophets and apostles. How much I am struck with this language it is not easy for me to say; but certainly I see great reason not to despise them, for they have many arguments to adduce, and something of an extraordinary spirit about them, but no one can judge so well upon the subject as Martin Luther. For the peace and glory of the church, therefore, he should have an opportunity of examining these men, especially as they appeal to him.

(u) Comp. HOORNBECK Summa Controversiarum Religionis, Art. De Anabaptismo.

(x) CAM. Vit. Mel. Dr. Robertson follows Dupin in asserting that some of these pretenders had been disciples of Luther, but of this there is no evidence.

The Elector immediately had recourse to his most confidential counsellors, who, being unable to come to a decision, Melancthon continued to urge the necessity of obtaining Luther's sentiments, stating that Storck and his associates had raised disputes concerning the baptism of infants, and had appealed to divine revelations; and that for his own part he could not positively pronounce upon the merit of the case. The Elector alleged, that were he to recal Luther it would endanger his life, and advised Melancthon to avoid disputes with those fanatics; but in the mean time if he knew what justice required, he was ready to discharge his duty. Spalatine, (y) who was present in the council, has recorded these memorable words which the Elector pronounced in a manner that produced the deepest impression upon the whole assembly of ministers and counsellors, and which, he remarks, were expressive of his views to the very last day of his life.—“This is a most weighty and difficult affair, which I as a layman do not profess to understand. God has given to me and my brother considerable wealth; but if I could obtain a right understanding of the matter, I declare I would rather take my staff in my hand and quit every thing I possess, than knowingly resist the will of God.” Luther, in a letter to Melancthon, expresses himself in a very judicious manner. It was written on the seventeenth of January. “In regard to these prophets I cannot approve of your timidity, though you are my superior both in capacity and erudition. In the first place, when they bear record of themselves they ought not to be implicitly believed, but their spirits should be tried, as John admonishes. You know Gamaliel’s advice, but I have heard of nothing said or done by them which Satan himself could not imitate. I would have you examine whether they can produce a proof of their commission, for God never sent any one, not even his own Son, who was not either properly called to the office, or authorized by miracles. The ancient prophets were legally appointed; and their mere assertion of being called by a divine revelation is not a sufficient warrant for receiving them, since God did not even speak to Samuel but with the authority of Eli. So much for their public character. You should also examine their private spirit, whether they have experienced spiritual distresses and conflicts with death and hell, and the power of regeneration. If you hear smooth, tranquil, and what they call devout and religious raptures, though they speak of being caught up to the third heavens, do not regard them, while the sign of the Son of Man is wanting, THE CROSS, the only touchstone of Christians, and the sure discerner of spirits."

(y) Vid. Appendix VI.

In addition to the uneasiness occasioned by the affair of Storck and his associates, Melancthon was exceedingly afflicted by another untoward circumstance. At the very moment when union amongst themselves, and a vigilant discretion in all their proceedings was of the greatest importance, Carlostadt was guilty of excesses, which were not only disapproved by the other Reformers, but highly prejudicial to their cause. He was heard to say, that "he wished to be as great a man and as much thought of as Luther;" for which he was properly reprov'd by Melancthon, who reminded him, "that such language could only proceed from a spirit of emulation, envy and pride." (z) So long as he steadily pursued the great object of reforming the church from Popery by sound argument, and firm but Christian conduct, the other Reformers united to assist his efforts; but when motives of vanity, concurring with violence of temper, occasioned his zeal to degenerate into wild-fire and extravagance, they were compelled to discountenance him. But instead of being induced to correct his errors, he instantly aspired to become the leader of a turbulent mobility, whose minds he enflamed by popular harangues, and whom he encouraged to enter the great church of All Saints at Wittemberg, to break the crucifixes and images in pieces, and throw down the altars. Misled by a strange spirit of infatuation, he began to despise human learning, and to encourage the youths of the University to quit their studies. Yet with all this perversion of mind and impetuosity of conduct, which no remonstrances could check, it must be admitted that he held some important truths, particularly the real doctrine of the Sacrament, which the Lutherans misunderstood, and which afterwards occasioned violent controversies. And yet, even in maintaining acknowledged truth, his manner of doing it was equally disapproved by the gentle Melancthon and the impetuous Luther. The former, who was never addicted to exaggeration, represents him in a most unamiable light, as “a man of savage disposition, of no genius and learning, or even common sense ; as having plotted against the reputation of Luther out of revenge for his opposing his fanatical practises ; but at the same time as possessing a very insinuating and plausible exterior, though unable to disguise his violent ambition, passion, and envy, for any long period.” (a)

(z) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 199.

The state of Luther's mind during these transactions can be more easily imagined than expressed. Every day increased his anxieties, every occurrence excited fresh alarm. The foundations of that noble structure he had been so actively engaged in erecting seemed to be endangered. What could be done?—Was he to remain at a distance from the scene of action at a period when his skill and heroism appeared peculiarly requisite; or, could he venture upon incurring the Elector's displeasure by a clandestine and unauthorized return?—Restless with increasing impatience he determined to hazard every thing, and at length on the third of March 1522, hastened to Wittemberg. An apology for this proceeding was written to the Elector, pleading the urgent necessity of the case arising out of the existing irregularities; but in two other communications, the one a letter addressed to Melancthon and the other to Amsdorff, he assigns an additional reason for his return, namely, the assistance he wished to obtain from them and others in the translation of the Scriptures into the German language. (b)

(a) Ep. ad Fred. Mycon. ap. HOSPIN.

For the purpose of engaging in this important labour, Luther had devoted the previous summer to the study of Greek and Hebrew. His skill in German is universally admitted. Versions of a very inferior kind had been published at Nuremberg in the years 1477, 1483, 1490 and at Augsburg in 1518, which were not only ill calculated to attract public notice, but interdicted from being read. The gospels of Matthew and Mark were first published by Luther, then the Epistle to the Romans and the other books in succession, till the whole New Testament was circulated by the month of September. In a letter which Melancthon addressed to the celebrated physician George Sturciad, dated the fifth of May 1522, he speaks of the whole version being in the hands of the printers. The essential assistance he rendered in completing the work is likewise apparent, for he states that he had paid particular attention to the different kinds of money mentioned in the New Testament, and had consulted with many learned men that the version might express them with the utmost accuracy. He begs his correspondent to give his opinion, and to consult Mutianus as being profoundly skilled in the knowledge of Roman antiquities. He entreats him to attend to his application from a regard to the general good, and to do it immediately because the work was in the press and printing with great expedition. "I wait your reply," he adds, "with the utmost anxiety, and I beseech you for faith, love and kindness' sake, and every other urgent consideration, not to disappoint us. (c)

(b) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 123.

The difficulties of the undertaking particularly impressed upon Luther when he proceeded to the translation of the Old Testament, but he persevered with indefatigable zeal. It appears that Melancthon was deeply engaged in revising this important work for his friend two months previous to his return. (d)

The utmost pains were taken to ensure the accuracy of the translation, for a select party of learned men at Wittemberg assembled every day with Luther to revise every sentence; and they have been known to return fourteen successive days, to the reconsideration of a single line or even a word. Each had an appropriate part assigned him according to his peculiar qualification. Luther collated the ancient Latin versions and the Hebrew, Melancthon the Greek original,

(c) MELANCTH. Ep. I. ad Geo. Sturciadem Erphordicæ.

(d) "Vetus Testamentum cuditur, in quo recognoscendo modo nonnihil negotii nobis fit." MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. IV. 1. ad Joach. Camerar.

Cruciger the Chaldee, and other professors the Rabbinical writings. At the request of Luther, Spalatine afforded them every assistance, by sending them specimens from the Elector's collection of gems. (e) The Pentateuch went to press in December, and a second edition of the New Testament appeared at the same time. A version of the Prophets was published in the year 1527, and the other books in succession till the whole laborious task was completed in 1530. Luther states how much he was indebted to his particular friend in writing to Spalatinus. "I translated not only the gospel of John, but the whole New Testament in my Patmos, but Melancthon and I have begun to revise the whole, and by the blessing of God it will prove a noble labour, but your assistance is sometimes requisite to suggest apt words and turns of expression. We wish it to be distinguished for simplicity of style." The whole was republished in a new edition in 1534, which was followed by others in 1541 and 1545. The names of Luther's principal coajutors in this great undertaking ought to be had in everlasting remembrance—PHILIP MELANCTHON, CASPAR CRUCIGER, JUSTUS JONAS, JOHN BUGENHAGIUS OR POMERANUS, and

(e) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. 1. p. 204. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 160. "Sæpè ut ipsemet fassus cum Philippo, Aurogallo, aliis totos quatuordecim dies in interpretatione unius voculæ aut lineolæ hæsit."

MATTHEW AUROGALLUS: the corrector of the press was GEORGE RORARIUS. (f)

After completing this translation of the Scriptures into the German language, Bugenhagen annually kept the return of the day on which it was finished, by inviting a select party of friends to his house in order to celebrate so important an achievement. This social meeting was usually designated THE FESTIVAL OF THE TRANSLATION OF THE SCRIPTURES. (g)

To the fastidious we must leave it to censure the desire which may probably glow, at least for a moment, in many a bosom, to have been contemporary with these benevolent spirits, to have shared their noble labour, and to have annually participated in their pious convivialities. Never was a festive board more nobly surrounded or more religiously devoted—never did a more splendid occasion of holy triumph present itself. Germany had already hailed her Reformers, heard their discourses and witnessed their progress with mingled emotions of fear and satisfaction;—already was she deeply indebted to them for a series of disinterested efforts to deliver her from the abject slavery in which superstition and tyranny had combined to chain her down during past ages; but a new obligation of far greater extent was incurred by their furnishing to every man the means of the most direct acquaintance with divine communications through his vernacular language. Nor was the mere accomplishment of this difficult undertaking the only subject of generous exultation to these eminent men, every year and almost every day exhibited great and good effects resulting from their labour. "The different parts of this translation," observes a learned historian, "being successively and gradually spread abroad among the people, produced sudden and almost incredible effects, and extirpated root and branch, the erroneous principles and superstitious doctrines of the church of Rome, from the minds of a prodigious number of persons." (h)

(f) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. p. 204.

(g) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 318. in Vit. Joan. Bugenhagii.

Let us pause for a moment to reflect on the wonderful concatenation of a few past events by the invisible but efficacious agency of a superintending Providence. Leo X. had issued a Bull against Luther which totally failed of its object; the Pope exasperated at witnessing his own impotency, appealed to Charles V. newly promoted to the empire upon the death of Maximilian I. to inflict exemplary vengeance upon his heretical subject; Charles being under personal obligations to (h) MOSHELM'S Eccles. Hist. Vol. IV. p. 60, 8vo.

Frederic Elector of Saxony, who had materially assisted his advancement in opposition to his rival Francis I. King of France, was disposed to concede to his wishes by refraining from the publication of a condemnatory edict, but, not to offend the Pope, he resolved to summon Luther to the diet of Worms as a previous and prudential measure:—at Worms he appeared, where he breathed the spirit of an apostle and exhibited the heroism of a martyr; but he was declared an enemy to the holy Roman empire and became instantly exposed to its vengeance. At this crisis Frederic screened him from the storm, by a 'friendly seizure and imprisonment at the Castle of Wartenberg, by which means, while his sudden disappearance operated to the benefit of the reformed cause, by exasperating the minds of men against the Roman See for a supposed violation of its promise of security, his confinement furnished him with leisure which even had his life been spared, he could not otherwise have enjoyed at such a turbulent moment, for prosecuting the study of original languages, and preparing for the translation of the holy Scriptures into the vernacular language of Germany. While his enemies and countrymen thought him dead and his particular friends lamented his absence, trembled for his safety, and mourned over the calamitous circumstances in which they became involved, the Providence of God had unexpectedly and at the fittest moment set him about a work in the forests of Thuringia, which was hereafter to gladden the hearts of Germany and more than any other circumstance to promote the Reformation; and thus amidst a universal pause of wonder and apprehension, God was mysteriously and secretly operating his own purposes!

It was to be expected that the Catholics should endeavour to disparage the version of Luther, and yet Maimbourg confesses it was elegant and very generally read, although Jerome Emser one of the counsellors of Duke George of persecuting notoriety, and Cochläeus, attacked it in terms of bitter reproach. The former under the patronage of his master, published what he called a correct translation of the New Testament in opposition to it, and which as it consisted of little else than a republication of Luther's very version almost verbatim, but with a Preface of his own, was in reality the highest compliment he could have paid to his antagonist and the most effectual condemnation of himself. The result however of this animosity was most gratifying to every pious mind. Luther's version was read even in the pages of his adversary; and he expresses himself upon the occasion in language which strikingly illustrates his character, "There is a just judge who will see to this. The best revenge which I can wish for is that though Luther's NAME is suppressed, and that of his adversary put in its place, yet Luther's BOOK is read, and thus the design of his labours is promoted by his very enemies."(i)

This German translation of the Scriptures was proscribed by an Edict of Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, the Emperor's brother, forbidding the subjects of his Imperial Majesty to have any copy of it in their possession. The same interdiction extended to all his writings. Several princes issued similar prohibitions, among whom we can feel no surprize at discovering Duke George, but with what kind of effect—such as are acquainted with the history of persecution may easily conjecture. (k)

Soon after his return from the Castle of

(i) The learned reader may find a complete vindication of Luther's Version, against the cavilling criticisms of Cochläus and Emser in SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. I. Sect. 127 and add. I.

(k) The particularity of detail into which it has been deemed proper to digress upon this subject, will be more than justified by the reader from a consideration of the interesting nature of these facts in themselves, the great importance of the work achieved and the extensive exertions of Christian benevolence in a similar way at this moment by the British nation. The circulation of the Holy Scriptures is justly deemed an object worthy the utmost efforts of the most expansive philanthropy and the most assiduous zeal; and while competent men are stationed in different parts of the world to translate the inspired volume into the respective dialects of various tribes and nations whose very name was scarcely heard of before, princes Wartenberg, Luther consented to hold a conference in the presence of Melancthon with some of the chief fanatical pretenders to prophetic inspiration before mentioned. Mark Stubner, Cellarius and another, met the Reformer and his friend on this occasion. Stubner related his visions and inspirations to very patient hearers, and when he had finished Luther coolly replied, "that nothing he had said was supported by the authority of Scripture, but seemed to result from a deluded imagination, or the suggestions of some evil spirit." This enraged Cellarius, who with the voice and gesticulations of a madman, stamping the ground and beating the table, exclaimed against the audacity of Luther for insinuating such things against so divine a person! Stubner, however, was more composed, possibly fancying himself in a tranquil and devout rap- and peasants, rich and poor, young and aged are concurring to support by their voluntary liberalities the necessary expenditure.

I cannot dismiss this subject without informing the reader, that, besides a valuable collection of other literary and classical remains, James Edwards, Esq. of Manor House, Harrow-on the Hill, till lately had in his possession LUTHER'S OWN COPY of his own German Version of the Scriptures. To this gentleman I beg to express my public acknowledgments not only for pointing out this invaluable curiosity, but allowing me to transcribe some of the original writing of Luther, Bugenhagenius, and Melancthon, by whose autographs in the blank pages it is fully authenticated. One page is also occupied by George Major. Vide Appendix VIII.

ture. (l) “Luther,” says he, “I will give you a proof that I am influenced by the Spirit of God, by revealing your own thoughts. You are at this moment inclining to believe in the truth of my doctrine.” The prophet however was mistaken, for Luther afterwards affirmed he was thinking of that sentence, “the Lord rebuke thee, Satan;” and he very soon dismissed them with these words, “The God whom I love and serve will confound your impotent pretensions.” They retired full of self-sufficiency, pouring out execrations upon Luther and promising what mighty things they would do to demonstrate the reality of their commission. They left Wittemberg the same day. (m)

A genuine FANATIC is one of the most pitiable objects in creation; a compound of ignorance and enthusiasm. Enflamed with self-importance he mistakes the conceits of his own disordered imagination for the dictates of inspiration, and fancies his intercourse with the Deity to be of a sublimer nature than that of his inferior fellow mortals. He believes himself gifted above others, destined to move in a higher sphere, to walk in the precincts of heaven, to hold an immediate connexion with the Divine Spirit, which elevates him above the laws and ordinances, the instructions and the guidance of

(l) Vide p. 203.

(m) CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 51, 52.

Scripture. But sure nothing can be more degrading to reason than such absurdities, nothing more disparaging to religion. The mischief such a person is calculated to do results from this circumstance, that he denominates passion by the sacred name of religion; a passion which, heated to intemperance and kindling into the ardours of rapture, spurns at reason, and substitutes a man's own fancy and good opinion of himself for the true foundation of piety. When such sentiments as these prevail, it is impossible to calculate or to conjecture the monstrous excesses into which they may precipitate the ignorant classes of mankind, who are soon attracted by plausible however ridiculous novelties. But genuine religion and wild fanaticism are perfect antipodes; and intelligent persons, of an observing cast of mind, will always look upon the latter as a beacon to warn them away from the dangers attending any deviation from the plain course of scriptural instruction.

Should any be disposed to censure the conduct of Melancthon for that extreme leniency which he manifested to Storek and his associates from Zwickau, be it recollected, that though Luther's zeal charged him with undue timidity, a word which both he and historians after him have applied with great incaution, several extenuating circumstances must not be overlooked. Stubner being a man of learning, and probably of some address, and knowing the importance of obtaining if possible the influence of Melancthon, probably resorted to every insinuating method to gain his support, disclosing his sentiments only in a very gradual manner. The real goodness and amiable temper for which Melancthon was so remarkable, predisposed him to judge favourably of others, especially if they were professedly in pursuit of Truth. He was himself a diligent and patient inquirer. It was a period of religious discovery, and he daily felt that he had much to learn. The very extravagances of these prophets were not more abhorrent to the present views of the Reformers, than the tenets of Lutheranism were to the mind of Luther himself at a previous and not very remote period of his life. Every impartial person must perceive what many transactions hereafter to be recorded will fully prove, that the hesitation of Melancthon in deciding upon new subjects or in difficult cases which seemed to require a promptitude of action, resulted not so much from timidity, as from conscientious scruples of mind. It was not that he feared temporal, but moral consequences; and though Luther may be excused in a period when the mind was habitually kept warm and irascible by controversy, for using such an epithet, those who are solicitous of forming a correct idea of him will rather deem it slanderous than descriptive to call him the timid Melancthon. If, after all, his first treatment of Storck and his associates be considered as an unwarrantable excess of candour, his language became more decided as his convictions of their delusion and misconduct increased: (n) and if this be a shade in his character, it is otherwise so bright that the admitted imperfection will not materially obscure it; and the biographer can feel no very powerful temptation where such a splendour of excellence is discernible, to become the labored apologist. (o)

Luther, besides many useful tracts of his own, having secretly taken from Melancthon a manuscript Commentary on the Epistle of Paul to the Romans, printed it without his knowledge. It was afterwards published in the year 1540, with a dedication to Philip, landgrave of Hesse. Luther's apology for this proceeding is curious and characteristic. It is prefixed to the Commentary of his friend.

(n) Vid. MELANCTH. Epistolæ, passim.

(o) Whoever wishes for further information respecting the enthusiasts above referred to, may consult HOORNBEECK Summa Controversiarum Religionis.—PERIZON. Hist. sec. xvi.—SPANHEM Orig. Prog. Sect. & Nom. Anabaptistarum.—BAYLE Dict. Hist. & Crit. Art. Anabaptistes—Notes (C) and (K), in which most of the principal works written on the subject are mentioned.

“ Martin Luther to Philip Melancthon—grace and peace in Christ.

“ ‘Be angry and sin not : commune with your own heart upon your bed and be still.’—I am the person who dares to publish your Annotations, and I send you your own work. (p) If you are not pleased with it, it may be all very well, it is sufficient that you please us. If I have done wrong, you are to blame ; why did not you publish it yourself ? why did you suffer me so often to ask, to insist, to importune you to publish it, and all in vain ?—So much for my apology against you ; for you see I am willing to turn thief, and am not afraid of your future accusations or complaints. As to those whom you suspect of being disposed to sneer, I have this to say to them—‘ Do better !’—What the impious Thomists falsely arrogate to their leader, namely, that no one has written better upon St. Paul, I truly affirm of you. Satan himself influences them to boast in this manner concerning their Thomas Aquinas, and to spread his doctrines and his poison far and wide. I know in what sort of spirit and with what correctness of judgment I pronounce this of you. If these famous and mighty men should choose to sneer at my opinion, the consequence belongs to me, not you. But I wish to vex these scorers more and more; and I say that the Commentaries of Jerome and Origen are mere trifles and follies compared to your Annotations. But what, you will say, is the purpose of aiming to provoke these great men against me? Well—you may be humble if you please, but let me boast for you. Who has ever prohibited persons of great capacity from publishing something better if they can—and thus demonstrating the rashness of my judgment. For my part, I wish we could find out those who could and would publish something better. I threaten you, further, to steal and publish your remarks upon Genesis and the Gospels of Matthew and John, unless you supersede me by bringing them forward. You say, Scripture ought to be read alone and without a commentary; this is right enough if you speak in reference to Jerome, Origen, Thomas Aquinas, and others of the same class, for their commentaries are the mere vehicles of their own notions, rather than the sentiments of Paul, and the doctrine of Christianity; but no one can properly call yours a commentary; it is rather an introduction to the study of scripture in general, and a guide to the knowledge of Christ: in which it surpasses all the Commentaries hitherto published. As to what you plead, that your Annotations are not in all respects satisfactory to yourself, it is difficult enough to believe you. But behold I do believe—you are not fully satisfied with yourself, nor is this asked or desired of you: we would have Paul maintain his preeminence, lest any one should insinuate that Philip is superior or equal to Paul. It is sufficient you are only second to Paul; but we shall not dislike any body for coming still nearer to this great original. We know very well that you are nothing; and we know also that Christ is all and in all, who if he pleases can speak as he did to Balaam by an ass; why then should he not speak by a man?—art thou not a man?—art thou not a servant of Christ?—has he not endowed thee with capacity? If thou shouldst choose to improve and enlarge this volume by elegant and learned additions, it will be a grateful service; but in the mean time we are determined to be gratified in spite of you, by possessing ourselves of the sentiments of Paul by your means. If I have offended you by this proceeding, I do not ask pardon; but lay aside your displeasure, by which you will rather give offence to us, and you will have to ask forgiveness. God preserve and prosper you for evermore. Wittemberg, July 29, 1522.”

(p) The Latin expresses it in a stronger manner, and with more of pun than our idiom will quite allow : “ te ipsum ad te mitto.”

If Luther did not ask pardon for publishing Melancthon's Annotations on the Epistle of Paul to the Romans without his consent, the reader will not demand an apology for inserting a few brief extracts from this valuable performance, especially as it has never hitherto been presented to the English reader. It may be regarded as a specimen of our Reformer's expository method, which in giving a complete view of his character and talents, could not be wholly omitted, nor, without incurring the charge of prolixity, further extended.

“ CHAP. I. v. 1.—‘ Paul separated unto the gospel of God.’ Here the apostle states the business he was commanded to execute, namely, to preach the gospel. The reader should remember that there is a material difference between the law and the gospel, to which we have already adverted, and of which more will be said in remarking upon the third chapter. The description which he gives of the gospel is, that it is a divine promise communicated in the sacred writings concerning Jesus Christ the Son of God, of the seed of David according to the flesh, declared to be the Son of God with power, through sanctification of the Spirit, and resurrection from the dead; that he is the Messiah or King, by whom deliverance from sin and eternal life are dispensed.

“ This description will be more obvious by noticing the contradistinction between the Law and the Gospel. The Law represents what we are, and what we are required to do. It demands perfect obedience, without providing for the forgiveness of sin, or liberating us from the power of sin and death; but rather arms sin against us, by accusing transgressors, and alarming them with the terrors of death. But the GOSPEL freely promises the remission of sin and deliverance from death, by Jesus the Son of God, who was descended from David according to the prophetic declarations. Paul states this at the outset of his discourse, that we might know his meaning, and distinguish properly between the law and the gospel; as though he had said, ‘ Paul divinely called to teach the gospel of Christ; not to teach the law or to teach philosophy.’

“ V. 3, 4.—‘ Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, &c.” In this phrase he opposes the vulgar notions of the Jews, who expected a Messiah that would be—not the Son of God by his own nature, but only a man like the other prophets, though surpassing them in wisdom, virtue, and capacity to obtain and govern the whole world. But the patriarchs and prophets knew their Messiah to be the Son of God, who was at that period their governor and their guide. Jacob said, ‘ The Angel who delivered me out of all evil bless the lads,’ speaking of the deliverer whom he knew to be promised, and whose proper office is to deliver out of all evil. Jacob, Moses, Daniel saw him by faith, and John testifies that the Messiah was the Son of God, and constantly present with the patriarchs. ‘In the beginning,’ says he, ‘was the Word, . . . all things were made by him,’—referring to those illustrious victories over the devil which this glorious leader and captain enabled Noah, Abram, Joseph, Moses, Samuel, David, Isaiah, and Jeremiah to obtain.

“The term ὀρισθέντος, which the Greeks explain by another, ἀποδειχθέντος, is singularly emphatical, and it refers to the manifestation of the Son of God, as having risen from the dead, and as being possessed of inconceivable power, evinced by numerous miracles.

“The verb ὀρίζεσθαι, signifies to be certainly proclaimed; in opposition to the opinions of the Jews, who expected a Messiah to be an extraordinary man indeed, but only a man, distinguished by heroic achievements, and who should bestow riches, but not a new nature and eternal life. But Paul says that this Messiah would be powerful, and would give the holy Spirit by which new light, justification and eternal life would be dispensed, and the devil vanquished. This he calls a real deliverance, which our forefathers both understood and experienced in the various trials of their faith, their dangers, and their conflicts with Satan and with death. And how much greater is this deliverance than that which some anticipate in the appearance of a Messiah, who like Alexander is to divide kingdoms and provinces amongst his soldiers.

“ CHAP. V. v. 2.—“ We rejoice in hope of the glory of God.” It may be asked, what is the value of justification and deliverance from sin and death, when sin still adheres to us, and we continue obnoxious to death, and all the various afflictions incident to human life? In what respects are Christians happier than others? for Christians are often derided for speaking about deliverance from sin and death, when they are equally with other men exposed to calamities. Saints themselves are often ready to acknowledge their infirmities, and are agitated with doubts whether if God really delighted in them, they should be the subjects of such infirmity; and this is no trifling temptation, because when faith realizes, according to the Scriptures, that God is propitious through Jesus Christ, our weakness expects to see this kindness in some manner visibly displayed. So the Anabaptists despise the doctrine of faith, and affirm that we are to seek for celestial visions; and there are others who dream they have already perfectly obeyed, and are acceptable to God, as having satisfied the claims of his law, and being without sin.

“ Paul therefore opposes each of these. He administers consolation to those who acknowledge their infirmities, and commands them to rejoice in hope; and to consider that they shall enjoy the glory of eternal life, which though not at present revealed, shall certainly be bestowed. On which account it became them to acquiesce, and not to doubt or despair, though they were at present exposed to infirmities. He directs them to rejoice in hope, that is, they are not to suppose that this perfection of nature and enjoyment is now to be attained, nor are they to expect any new manifestations from heaven, but to stand fast in the truth of Scripture, and aim to please God by faith in Christ, considering that a present perfection in this sinful state is not to be expected.

“ The sentiment therefore is, that although the world, and even our own reason, may determine that we do not yet possess glory, or complete emancipation from sin and death, yet we rejoice, that is, we indulge the hope of that glory with which God will eventually distinguish us. We cleave to this hope, for it is not falacious.

“ V. 3.—‘ And not only so, but we glory in tribulation also,’ &c. He as it were corrects the former statement. We have not only a glory in expectation, but in present possession; and what was it? Affliction. He is opposing the opinions and reasonings of the world.

“ In the view of the world we are afflicted :

we seem abandoned and rejected by God ; and this reproach upon the gospel deters the generality of mankind from embracing it. This mode of reasoning indeed seems legitimate enough—afflictions are curses, that is, evils : and therefore signs of God's displeasure. But Paul on the contrary assures us that they are not curses, but are proper occasions of glorying ; for they are not signs of the divine displeasure, but intimations of the love of God.

“ We have then a double glory—the one which is the greatest is in expectation, consisting in the renovation of our nature, and the enjoyment of eternal life ; but this glory we possess in hope : the other glory is in present possession, and it consists in affliction : for although the world judges that affliction is an evidence of divine anger, yet we know it to be an indication of his love ; and obedience to his afflictive dispensations to be a new and acceptable kind of worship.

“ Four things, therefore, ought to be well impressed upon our minds respecting afflictions :

“ 1. They are appointed. We do not suffer affliction by chance, but by the determinate counsel and permission of God.

“ 2. By means of affliction God punishes his people, not that he may destroy them, but to recal them to repentance, and the exercise of faith: for afflictions are not indications of displeasure, but of kindness—‘ He willeth not the death of a sinner.’

“ 3. God requires us to submit to his afflictive dispensations, and to expend our indignation and impatience upon our own sins; and since he determines to afflict his church in the present state, submission tends to glorify his name.

“ 4. Resignation however is not all; he requires faith and prayer, that we may both seek and expect divine assistance. Thus he admonishes us, ‘ Call upon me in the day of trouble, I will answer thee, and thou shalt glorify me.’

“ These four considerations are applicable to all our afflictions, and are calculated if properly regarded to produce that truly Christian patience which essentially differs from mere philosophical endurance.

“ CHAP. VIII. v. 3.—‘ God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, for sin condemned sin in the flesh.’ It is elsewhere stated, he was ‘ Made sin for us.’ These words are peculiarly emphatical—Christ is represented as being made sin or a sacrifice for sin: it is a Hebrew form of expression, corresponding with the Latin term piaculum and the Greek κάθαρμα. A similar idea is conveyed in the use of the word curse or anathema and which signifies any thing devoted to punishment in order to propitiate the offended Deity. In this manner Isaiah speaks of Christ, ‘thou didst make his soul a sin,’ that is, an offering or sacrifice for sin: and Paul frequently inculcates the same sentiment in his second epistle and fifth chapter of the Corinthians, ‘He who knew no sin was made sin for us,’ that is, an offering or victim who sustained the punishment of sin and satisfied the demands of justice for us. In writing to the Galatians he suggests a similar sentiment, ‘Christ was made a curse,’ that is, piaculum, a sacrifice, sustaining the curse and displeasure of God against sin.

V. 22.—We know that the whole Creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. This is an argument from the example of the Creation. All things are subject to corruption and to the abuse of the wicked till the period of deliverance, which therefore we expect.

“ In this place Paul contemplates with great emotion of mind the dreadful confusion and corruption of human affairs, war, bloodshed, devastation and other evils prevalent in the world. He contemplates the mighty power of sin and the tyranny of Satan, and how degrading it is that universal nature should be subjected to the devil and to death in consequence of human transgression.

“ Here then in the first place is to be considered the feelings of Christians amidst their afflictions. Delay is tormenting to the mind and we are incapable of foreseeing the method of deliverance. Troubles are daily increasing and the truly pious are deeply afflicted to witness the great dangers which surround the church of Christ; and while its distresses multiply, its deliverance appears to be delayed.

“ Whatever therefore may be the source of our grief, whether public or private, the apostle endeavours to impart consolation by referring us to the heavens and the earth, to the creation at large as subjected to the abuse of the wicked. Tyrants possess the dominion of empires—the impious enjoy the riches of the world, but the church of Christ for which all things were created, suffers martyrdom and is deprived of life, light and every other advantage. But these things were formed that they might be in subserviency to the saints for the glory of God, and as they are at present subjected to abuse and the power of corruption through the transgression of Adam, the creatures themselves wait for the promised deliverance.”——

The Popish writers agree in lamenting the increase of Lutheranism during the years 1522 and 1523; its opponents, however, amongst whom George Duke of Saxony, Henry Duke of Brunswick, and Ferdinand Archduke of Austria may be considered the principal, were by no means asleep. The former, the most violent bigot of the day and the most inveterate enemy of Luther and the Reformation, used every means to influence Frederic and his brother John to adopt hostile measures: but their prudence frustrated his views in Saxony. The light spread rapidly in Europe, and Caspar Hedio, Martin Bucer, and John Oecolampadius were diffusing it in Alsace and Switzerland.

Frederic however felt himself in a most critical situation. The Pope, Adrian VI. who had succeeded Leo X. had sent his legate Francis Cheregato to the Imperial Diet of Nuremberg, to demand the immediate execution of the sentence pronounced against Luther at the Diet of Worms. The Emperor concurred in his views and the Popish princes were evidently concerting measures to crush the Reformation. In this situation the Elector applied to Luther, Melancthon and Bugenhagius for their opinion on this question. "Is it lawful for your prince if his subjects should be attacked on account of religion by the Emperor, or any other ruler to protect them by arms?" To this they replied, "it was not lawful, chiefly because the princes were not yet convinced in their consciences of the truth of the reformed doctrine, neither had their subjects implored protection against violence, nor had the states of the provinces deliberated on the subject of war: above all, those who took up arms for their defence ought to be well satisfied of the justice of their cause.”(q)

Clement VII. being elevated to the Papal Chair upon the decease of Adrian, selected Cardinal Campeggio a skilful negociator for his legate to the Imperial Diet at Nuremberg, where he arrived in the early part of the year 1524. He was commissioned to insist upon the princes uniting to execute the decree of Worms against Luther; and the Emperor gave similar instructions to his minister. After some debate it was resolved by the Diet that the Pope, with the consent of the Emperor, should at an early period summon a free council in Germany to deliberate upon the Lutheran affairs, and that in the meantime a Diet should be held at Spire to consider of the mode of proceeding. This of course did not satisfy Campeggio, and retiring to Ratisbon he held a private assembly with some of the princes and bishops of the empire, whom he engaged to resolve upon executing the decree of Worms. This unwarrantable procedure induced those who differed from Campeggio to pursue a measure of self-defence, by holding a similar Convention at Spire to confirm the decrees of Nuremberg.

At this period what has been called the

(q) HORTLED. Hist. T. I. Lib. II.

Sacramental controversy originated. Carlostadt resolutely denied what Luther no less resolutely maintained the doctrine of Consubstantiation, or that the real body and blood of Christ were received together with the bread and the wine, though they were not absolutely transubstantiated. This controversy divided the early friends of the Reformation, and long threatened the most serious consequences. The Reformers of Switzerland and many in Germany dissented from Luther and Melancthon, maintaining that the Lord's Supper was to be observed only as a commemoration of the death of Christ. It must be owned that Consubstantiation and Transubstantiation are as similar in nature as in name, and it would require good spectacles to discern any very essential difference between these two species of nonsense.

Carlostadt found it necessary to retire to Orlamund, and became the Pastor of the village in defiance of the right of appointment vested in the Elector and the University, where he not only railed against Luther's view of the Eucharist, but appears to have been hurried on by his violence of temper to very enthusiastical pretensions. He was at length expelled by the prince and his brother from their dominions, but afterwards recalled by the Elector John.

Carlostadt by raising mobs, pulling down images and railing against learning, gave the final impulse to the fanaticism of Muncer, Storck and their associates. "It may be true," says Luther, "and candour may require me to believe that Carlostadt does not intend to promote sedition and murder, yet so long as he persists in raising headstrong mobs and exciting them to demolish statues with unauthorized violence, he possesses the same seditious sanguinary spirit that has shewn itself at Alsted. How often has Melancthon in vain admonished him not to raise tumults respecting ceremonies, and yet he has continued to defend the breakers of the peace to the last." (r)

These irregularities like a large tributary stream, swelled the torrent of insurrection that was at this moment rushing through the provinces of Germany. What has been termed the Rustic war or war of the Peasants arose indeed from the dissatisfaction of the lower classes with the civil restraints and oppressions of their chiefs which they affirmed to be no longer tolerable, but it received an accession of strength and a character of fanaticism from the union of the Anabaptists, who hastened to wage war against their lawful governors and the rights of civil society. Muncer placed himself at their head, and was at last taken and put to death after being defeated by the confederate princes of Germany in a pitched battle at Mulhausen in Thuringia. This terminated the rebellion.

From public it is necessary to turn to more private transactions. By the advice of his friends who perceived it necessary to recruit his health and spirits, Melancthon devoted part of the year 1524, to a journey on horseback to different places in Germany. He was accompanied by Nesenus and Camerarius, two intimate associates, the former distinguished for prudence, knowledge and amiableness of disposition, the latter who was afterwards his biographer, for very eminent literary attainments. Two youths, Burcardus and Silberbornerus, both of whom afterwards acquired considerable reputation, attended them.

The travellers arrived at Leipsic the first place of notoriety in their route, on the very day when Peter Mosellanus, the Greek professor, breathed his last. Melancthon and Camerarius had just time to visit him, and mingle their tears over his dying bed; the former deplored a friend and the latter a tutor. Mosellanus was a man of erudition. He is praised by Erasmus as a wit and a scholar; and at his decease, which took place at the early age of thirty-one, Melancthon composed the following tribute to his memory.

Κεῖται τῷδε τάφῳ πέζος ποτάμοιο μωσελλα
 Τοῦνομ' ἔχων, ρήτωρ ὃς ποτε ἠδὲς ἔην

Τῷ μακρόν τε βίον γῆρας τε φθόνησε ποθεινόν Ἀντὶ δὲ ἄσβεστον μοῖρό' ἀπεδῶκε κλέος
 Πᾶς δὲ μινυθάδιος καὶ τειρεσία πέλετ' αἰῶν
 Κρείτονος οὖν ἰῶρα γῆρας ἄμειψε θεός·

Beneath this tomb that meets the stranger's eye
 The dear remains of Mosellanus lie ;
 In vain might friends protracted life implore,
 The lovely rhetorician speaks no more ;
 But in the records of eternal fame
 Ages to come shall find inscrib'd his name,
 While from this transient life of tears and sighs
 God has removed him to yon fairer skies.

Melancthon and his friends proceeded from Leipsic across Upper Saxony to Fulda, where they heard of the death of the celebrated Ulric Hutten, an ingenious and learned man, but of a most waspish temper which was abundantly displayed in a book against Erasmus. Melancthon and Luther both disapproved his ferocious hostility. Though descended from a noble family, of which he was sufficiently vain, he died in extreme poverty at Zurich.

After visiting Frankfort they remained some time with Melancthon's mother, who had married a second husband at Bretten. Parting at length most reluctantly from endeared relatives they reached Heidelberg, where the University received their former student with every mark of distinction and regard.

Upon their return, not far from Frankfort they unexpectedly met Philip, Landgrave of of Hesse on his way to Heidelberg. The Landgrave rode up to him intimating that he understood his name was Philip Melancthon; to which he replied in the affirmative, and alighting from his horse in token of respect to the illustrious stranger, he was requested to remount and turn back to spend the night with him. The prince assured him his intentions were not hostile, but simply to converse upon some particular topics. Melancthon replied in a suitable manner and signified he entertained no apprehensions from the Landgrave. "But," said he, smiling, "if I should deliver you into the hands of Campeggio, I fancy he would think me doing him a very grateful piece of service." On their way, for Melancthon had turned back in complaisance, the prince put a number of questions of a casual nature, which he answered briefly and without entering into much explanation, both on account of the unfitness of the time and place and because the prince appeared to have his thoughts occupied with other concerns. At length he requested the prince's permission to return and prosecute his journey which he granted, stipulating that upon his arrival at Wittemberg he should send him in writing his deliberate opinion upon the subjects he had referred to in his conversation. He also gave him a safe conduct through his dominions. This inquisitive disposition of the Landgrave terminated in the happiest consequences, for he soon became the decided supporter of the Reformation. His allusion to Campeggio was sufficiently significant, for previous to this interview that subtle legate had sent to sound Melancthon upon the subject of coming over to the Papal party, but was dismissed with the following spirited reply—that, “ what he maintained to be true and knew to be so, he did not embrace or avow to gain the respect and favour of any living mortal, or from the hope of emolument, or from any ambitious motives, nor would he cease to esteem and aid those who promoted it. In the exertions he had hitherto made for the knowledge and advancement of truth, he was determined in a spirit of meekness to persevere. Let all who are truly desirous of the general peace and safety of the community confer and co-operate to heal the wounds which cannot possibly be any longer concealed, and to restrain the fury of those who will not desist from tearing and fretting with their malicious nails the existing sores. If this be not done and the violent bigots still pursue their course, they may expect to be the first to suffer.”

Soon after returning to Wittemberg Melancthon was plunged into the deepest affliction in consequence of the tragical death of Nesenus. He was lying at his ease in a fishing boat which he had hired as he frequently did for the purpose of recreation on the river Elbe, and which he had fastened to the trunk of a tree. The boat suddenly heaved about and whirled him into the water where he perished. The great men of the day were deeply affected by this fatal accident. Luther exclaimed in the transports of grief, "O that I had power to raise the dead!"—Micyllus, by no means, says Seckendorf, a contemptible poet, honoured his memory with an elegant epitaph. We insert a similar tribute from the pen of Melancthon.

Ως τὸ βροτῶν γένος ἐς' ἀν' ἐμώλιον ἠδ' ἀμενηνόν
 Ω νέοι ὡς αἰὼν πᾶσιν ἄπιτος ἐνι·
 Ἀπρῶϊδης θάνατος Νεσσηνόν ἔμαρψε νέον περ
 Δξερον ὄν συγερεῖ ἄλβιος οἶδμ' ὄλεσε·

How vain and fleeting is the race of man;—
 And how uncertain when we yield our breath!
 So sunk Nesenus 'neath the wave of death,
 Nor knew the treacherous stream so near him ran.

It is known that Melancthon placed considerable confidence in dreams, and that both he and Luther were addicted to astrology. In the course of his late journey he expressed a presentiment of the death of one of the three fellow travellers, Camerarius, Nesenus, or himself, from the occurrence of what he considered an ominous circumstance; and on the very day when Nesenus was drowned, he often related to those who were inclined to be jocose upon superstitious notions, that in his afternoon's nap he saw in a dream every circumstance of his friend's deplorable end. (s)

Another event of the present year was still more afflictive. Henry von Zutphen, to whom Melancthon and the whole University at Wittenberg were much attached on account of his wisdom, modesty and piety, had gone to preach the reformed doctrines in Ditmars, a county of Holstein in Denmark; the neighbouring priests like tygers watching for their prey, instantly sprung upon the victim and put him to death by the most exquisite tortures. (t)

On the fifth of May 1525, FREDERIC, ELECTOR OF SAXONY, surnamed the WISE, departed this life. His death was peaceful and pious, and as he was the early friend as well as the constant protector of the reformed cause, it was an event which could not fail of producing a strong impression on the minds of Luther and Melancthon. To them was entrusted the management of his funeral, which was conducted in an unostentatious manner, omitting the superstitious practices which the Papists had been accustomed to observe on similar occasions. Luther delivered a short discourse in German and Melancthon pronounced an oration in the Latin language. From the latter

(s) CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 97.

(t) CAM. Vit. Mel.

the reader is presented with the following extracts. (u)

“ Amidst this public, universal and most acute sorrow, in which the removal of one of the wisest of princes, a loss so calamitous to this state, is deplored, I feel myself scarcely possessed of sufficient presence of mind to attempt by a formal oration to alleviate the affliction of the nobles and the populace, with a voice too so faltering with grief. Though the extraordinary virtues of this prince peculiarly deserve the funeral honours which well constituted nations have always bestowed on their distinguished men; I am deeply conscious that our tears cannot express his superlative merits. Deeply affected as I am with the loss of the state which in a season of public commotion, and amidst the universal darkness of the age required the light of his wisdom, private feelings mingle with the general lamentation. I could not but honour him while living and mourn him when dead, not only for his signal virtues, but for the innumerable favours of which I have been the recipient. Incapacity of mind, however, and excess of grief forbid a minute enco-

(u) Seckendorf has detailed a variety of particulars respecting the will and last moments of the Elector, which it would not comport with the plan of this work to insert, but which will be interesting to peruse. Vide SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. II. Sect. vi. p. 34.

miun upon all his merits; let these flowing tears and this tremulous voice suffice to express the sincerest feelings of a grateful heart.

“ That this assembled multitude may form a correct idea of how much they are indebted to this prince, I propose slightly to allude to some things worthy of praise and present as it were a distant view of them; and though I would by no means assume so much as to hope that I shall be able to cure the grief of those who are aware of the magnitude of that calamity which the state has sustained, yet I may at least assuage their sorrow by reminding them of his virtues.

“ This nation is greatly indebted to the higher orders for the advancement of sacred literature, and under Providence for the existence of a prince, who as he was formed by nature pacific, humane and merciful, so nothing was more dear to him than the best interests of his people. The Saxon princes are notorious for their noble lineage, but Frederic was still more illustrious for his knowledge of the science of government and for genuine greatness of mind. I am mistaken if any one was so mighty in arms, and yet so anxious to render the employment of power subservient to the establishment of peace. He was just, gentle, firm, careful of the public welfare, diligent in ascertaining the rights of others, and pacifying the contentions of fellow-citizens, patient toward the faults of the people, aiming mildly to restore those who were capable of amelioration, but severe in punishing the wicked and incorrigible.

“ The multitude I am aware are smitten with an admiration of heroic achievements and esteem the soldier above the quiet citizen. The virtues of domestic life are overlooked, and they who cultivate peace and the arts acquire but a slender praise. But I confess myself of a far different opinion, for if you consider utility, if you remark the design of man’s creation, peace is preferable to war. I cannot prefer the great but warlike Anthony, to the peaceful Augustus, nor admit that Alcibiades was of more service to Greece than Solon ; of whom the former ruined his country by promoting eternal war, the latter not only preserved but constituted it a great state by furnishing it with ample laws. Frederic was formed to excel in the more useful and therefore the superior virtues. It was for him to preserve his people in peace amidst the most turbulent times. Who will venture to compare a victory with the more splendid achievement of securing tranquillity during many years (more than thirty) of commotion, while many envied and many endeavoured to excite war. Believe me the wisdom and the real fortitude of Frederic were of no common cast, co-operating to overcome the impetuosity of anger, to spare the lives of his subjects and to allay the violence of armed hostility by reason, by counsel and even by purchase. When the friends of Pericles were enumerating his trophies and congratulating him upon his victories, he replied, the praise did not belong to him so much as to his soldiers or to fortune, but he would claim this as his just distinction, that no citizen through his means ever put on mourning—intimating that he had never been guilty of any treacherous violence to advance his own dignity; but our illustrious prince not only never revenged private injuries, but he made even war itself yield to reason and become subservient to the preservation of his citizens.

“ He possessed the greatest private virtues and a peculiar devotedness to the study of the Christian religion. He always treated sacred things with the utmost seriousness, and amidst the contrariety of opinions prevalent in the present age he diligently aimed to discover the best and most indubitable. Before the present period of reform, when human rites were appointed in the churches by pontifical authority, he ever preferred what was most conducive to morals; and, because he felt persuaded that the common people were allured by these means to pay attention to religion, he erected churches, devised ceremonies, and exerted himself to procure teachers of sacred doctrine. Often would he confer with learned men on the nature and power of religion. These I consider proofs of a well disposed mind.

“ When Christianity began to rise again as it were from the dead and to be purified from her corruptions, he entirely devoted his mind to it, neither approving nor condemning any thing with precipitation. Wherever he saw the evidence of religious truth he embraced it with all his soul, and it became the means of establishing and nourishing his piety. He shunned insignificant disputes which did not conduce to edification; and when he observed certain impious men, upon pretence of enjoying evangelical liberty, debasing themselves and religion by a ferociousness of conduct and a contempt of public decency, he cautiously avoided giving them or others occasion of introducing rash changes through his example, perceiving the dangerous tendency of such innovations.

“ I omit the detail of a variety of excellencies for which he was distinguished: I say nothing of his character as a peacemaker, or his fidelity in friendship—of his care to avert dangers, or his firmness in sustaining them—of the suavity of his manners, his gentleness, or his remarkable acuteness of intellect—of his management of his financial resources, by which

of late they were so much recruited—these things are all known to you, and while you cherish gratitude to God for having bestowed such a Prince, ought never to be obliterated from your memories. Our country, alas! has lost not only a useful and gracious Prince, and one who has for a long period preserved public peace, but also a Father endowed with every various excellence. They merit the highest honour in every place who assiduously cultivate the country; he did indeed cultivate it, devoting the years of peace which he procured to its improvement, to the education of youth, and to the promotion of commerce. Our Academy has lost a Mécænas; no Prince possessed more capability, more devoted attachment, or knew better how to promote its interests. All Germany has lost—a Prince and a Counsellor in every important affair; for so great was his wisdom in German affairs, and his general influence, that he was deemed a proper person for the Imperial dignity, and was consulted as an oracle—lost too at a moment when Germany is ripe for civil war, and as the poet says,

Vicinæ ruptis inter se legibus urbes

Arma ferunt, sævit toto Mars impius orbe—

lost—when his authority, discretion, and superiority of mind were peculiarly requisite for the restoration of peace, the regulation of the laws, and the reformation of religion.

“ And shall we not mourn thy death, O Frederic?—may we not lament our bereavement at so inauspicious a moment, not only of a Ruler, but of a Father?—all eyes are turned to thy illustrious brother, and the country feels that in him it may safely repose the utmost confidence; but he is himself most painfully sensible that by thy removal he is deprived of another self, of another mind capacitated to aid amidst surrounding difficulties! This weeping senate too, the director of public affairs, seems almost exanimate with excess of sorrow, engaged as in a dubious strife, and accustomed to follow thy signals and thy well-known voice!

“ But away with intemperate grief. Wise men have usually adduced considerations respecting the brevity of human life, and the common destiny of mankind in order to fortify others against the evils incident to our condition; but we shall at present omit such references; for although Frederic derived great consolation and firmness of mind from realizing the general reason and utility of many appointments, yet another greater and more efficacious principle supported his spirit in the hour of dissolution. He knew from the instructions of Christianity that death was a change not only inflicted on the human race by divine appointment as a punishment for sin, in which view it is a melancholy circumstance ; but that to all the pious it is a delightful idea that by this means sin is destroyed, and we then commence the journey of immortality.

“ For how many years was our Prince disturbed and distracted by religious disputes! What forms of sin and of death were perpetually presented to his mind!—so that he came prepared to the last great battle. When he resigned this calamitous and wretched life we rather congratulate him on his departure who has left so many evidences that he has put on a glorious immortality, and who therefore ought not in fact to be represented as having lost his life. And as he departed with such tranquillity of mind, let us patiently submit to the whole will of God, and aspire after such a death whenever we are called into eternity.”

Melancthon used frequently to say of the Elector Frederic, that he had plucked a flower from all the virtues. (x) He wrote the following Epitaph which was inscribed on his monument.

Ante petet cursu Bojemica rura supino
 Unde in Saxonicos defluit Albis agros ;
 Inclyta quam possit meritorum fama tuorum Occidere in populis, Dux Frederice, tuis.

(x) SCULTETUS.

Aurea viderunt hæ gentes secula, regni
 Dum tibi Saxonici scepra tenere datum est.
 Pace frui placida campique urbesque solebant
 Horrenda extimuit classica nulla nurus
 Bella alii ferro, sed tu ratione gerebas
 Et sine vi victi sæpe dedere manus.
 Ingenio claros meruisti sæpe triumphos
 Militeque haud ullo fixa tropæa tibi:
 Et pacis studiis florere ac artibus urbes Contigit auspicio, Dux Frederice, tuo.
 Fovisti spretas hæc tempestate Camænas
 Unicus et studiis præmia digna dabas
 Namque tuo sumptu flavum schola condita ad Albim est
 Ut vitæ verum traderet illa modum.
 Hic Evangelii primum doctrina renata Deterso cæpit pura nitere situ.
 Induit hic veros vultus, iterumque colorem
 Accepit tandem religio ipsa suum.
 Et cùm Germani sumpsissent arma tyranni
 Contra Evangelium sanctaque jussa Dei; Doctores tibi cura pios defendere soli,
 Et Christi latè spargere dogma fuit.
 His tibi pro meritis gratâ præconiâ voce
 Posteritas omnis, virque puerque, canent.
 Nulla tuas unquam virtutes nesciet ætas
 Non jus in laudes mors habet atra tuas.

Beyond the utmost of Bohemia's bounds,
 Where Albi(y) pours along his lazy stream;
 From every tongue our FREDERIC'S name resounds,
 And all thy people hail the glorious theme.

(y) The river Elbe, which rises in the mountain of the Giants, on the confines of Bohemia and Silesia, and flows to the German Ocean.

Whilst thou the sceptre of these regions held,
 No rude alarms of war disturb'd our rest;
 Another golden age our eyes beheld,
 While quietness our fields and cities blest.

Thy rule was reason, and thy trophy peace,
 Thou hast deserv'd the triumphs of the field,
 But 'twas thy glory to bid discord cease,
 And though victorious, the first to yield.

Learning and Science by thy fostering care
 Adorn'd our cities, and proclaim'd thee WISE;
 But not to thee were Muses only dear,
 Restor'd Religion now delights our eyes.

Again we see her own celestial hue,
 Stripp'd of the meretricious modes of art;
 And when to arms against her, tyrants flew,
 Thine was the care to shield the poison'd dart.

The truth of Christ, the doctrines brought from heaven,
 By thee were well discern'd and spread around;
 To thee by present times applause is given,
 And future ages shall thy name resound.

Yes—distant times thy virtues shall proclaim,
 Nor death extinguish thy immortal fame!

In the midst of these public calamities, Saxony recently afflicted with the loss of Frederic, and Germany bleeding from the deep wounds of a civil war, occasioned by the rebellious conduct of the peasants, Luther, quite unexpectedly to most of his friends, married Catharine de Bora. Long in relinquishing his prejudices against the marriage of monks, he had once written thus to Melancthon; “ It should seem that because I supplied you with a wife, you wish to be revenged upon me; but depend upon it I will take effectual care not to be caught in your snares"—but affection charmed away his resolution. The time of this union was considered by some of his best friends as rather ill-chosen, amongst whom was Melancthon, who thought it would give occasion, as it assuredly did, to the numerous adversaries of Luther to make uncandid animadversions. (z) These occasioned him some temporary depression of spirits; but a consciousness of acting right, and an ardent attachment to his new companion, notwithstanding the dissatisfaction of some intimate friends with the time, dissipated his gloom. Melancthon addressed an apologetic letter to Camerarius on the subject. It was written in Greek, (a) and is as follows: "As some unfounded reports will probably reach you respecting the marriage of Luther, I think it proper to write to you the true state of the case, and to give my own opinion. On the thirteenth of June, Luther, to our great surprize, and without saying a word to his friends, married Catharine de Bora, and only invited Pomeranus, Lucca the painter, (z) CAM. Vit. Mel.

(a) "Elle est écrite," says the Bishop of Meaux, "toutè en Grec; & c' est ainsi qu' ils traitoient entre eux les choses secretes!" BOSSUET Hist. Des Variations, Tom. I. p. 65.

and Apellus the lawyer to supper in the evening, celebrating the espousals in the customary manner. Some perhaps may be astonished that he should have married at this unfavourable juncture of public affairs, so deeply afflictive to every good man, and thus appear to be unaffected and careless about the distressing events which have occurred amongst us; even though his own reputation suffers at a moment when Germany most requires his talents and influence. This however is my view of the subject. Luther is a man who has nothing of the unsocial misanthropist about him; but you know his habits, and I need say no more on this head. Surely it is no wonderful and unaccountable thing that his great and benevolent soul should be influenced by the gentle affections, especially as there is nothing reprehensible or criminal in it. The falsehood and calumny of the general report of his having been guilty of some misconduct is evident. He is in fact by nature fitted for the married state, and it is pronounced honourable in the sacred Scriptures. The allegation that it was unseasonable and unadvised, which our adversaries are so fond of producing, is not to be regarded, much less the derisions and reproaches of the vicious and profligate. I saw that his change of situation produced some degree of perturbation and gloom of mind, and I have done my utmost to cheer him: for I cannot condemn him as having committed a fault, or fallen into sin, though I grant God has recorded many sins which some of his ancient saints committed, in order that we might be stimulated to repose our confidence, not in men however dignified and distinguished, but in his word alone. It would be impious to condemn a doctrine because of the errors of its professors, but in the present instance I verily believe our friend has done nothing which is not fully defensible, or for which he ought to be accused. I have in possession the most decisive evidences of his piety and love to God, so that the malicious reproaches heaped upon Luther are nothing else than the inventions of scurrilous sycophants, who want employment for a slanderous tongue. In my opinion, however, this discouraging misrepresentation may be of some use, because it is dangerous, not only to persons who sustain ecclesiastical functions, but to every class of men, to enjoy too high a reputation. For, as a certain orator remarks, wise men as well as fools may be betrayed into an undue self-estimation and vanity of mind, through being gifted with some happy art or talent. But as the proverb says, "another kind of life, another kind of living."

"I have said so much on this subject lest this unexpected occurrence should have occasioned you an unnecessary degree of uneasiness, for I know you are concerned for the reputation of our friend Luther." (b)

It would be scarcely worth while in this place to introduce to notice the controversy between Erasmus and Luther, were it not for the illustration it affords of the character of Melancthon, who both on account of his connexion with the parties, and his general celebrity, was almost necessarily implicated in any public transaction that affected the reformed cause. No reflecting person will be surprized that they should become avowed antagonists. The character of each must naturally be disagreeable to the other. Erasmus could not approve the undaunted and untractable heroism of Luther, nor could Luther endure the trimming artifice and sycophancy of Erasmus.

The immediate occasion of this controversy was an essay on the freedom of the human will, which Erasmus ventured to publish in the autumn of 1524 and for which as he expresses it, he "expected to be pelted." Upwards of a year elapsed before Luther produced his reply in a treatise de Servo Arbitrio, "on the Bondage of the Will." His antagonist re-appeared in the field of strife, in a book in two parts entitled Hyperaspistes. "Did you ever read," says Melancthon, "a more bitter publication than this of Erasmus? He calls it Hyperaspistes, but it is absolutely aspis, that is, a wasp." (c)

During this contention Erasmus wrote some long and artful letters to Melancthon. He assures him that he felt impelled by the peculiarity of his circumstances and situation to write against Luther—that if Wittemberg had not been so distant, he should gladly have sought an interview and should have been happy in a visit from Melancthon—that he had read his “Loci Communes” and admired more than ever his candid and happy genius—that he had given the most moderate counsel to popes and princes, but that the Reformers used him very ill in giving him the nick-name of Balaam who was hired to curse Israel—that Cardinal Campeggio had sent one of his agents to discuss with him the propriety of removing Melancthon from his present situation. “My answer,” says he, “was that I sincerely wished such a genius as yours to be perfectly free from all these contentions, but that I despaired of your recantation. I open this secret to you in the entire confidence that you will be candid enough not to divulge it among the wicked ones!” In a subsequent letter written with much irritation of mind, obviously because Melancthon was not to be taken in the snare he had laid for his religious integrity, he professes that he did not bestow much pains to persuade him to forsake the Reformers as he foresaw it would be useless, but he wished he had devoted his genius solely to literature, for there were plenty of actors in the religious tragedy!

Who does not perceive the insinuating purpose of Erasmus? Vexed at heart that the Lutheran cause should be strengthened by the literary authority, unquestionable moderation and superior talents of Melancthon, he employed every means to separate him from it. Yet with his characteristic duplicity he disclaims the real motives which all his letters betray. Let us hear the noble language of Melancthon. "For my part I cannot with a safe conscience condemn the sentiments of Luther, however I may be charged with folly or superstition—that does not weigh with me. But I would oppose them strenuously if THE SCRIPTURES were on the other side; most certainly I shall never change my sentiments from a regard to HUMAN AUTHORITY or from the DREAD OF DISGRACE." These are the words of the wavering and the timid Melancthon!

In the autumn of the year 1525, by the Elector's permission and at the express solicitation of the Senate of Nuremberg, (d) he repaired thither to assist in forming a plan for the establishment of a public seminary. When he first received the application, he writes thus to his particular friend the senior Senator. "It afforded me great pleasure to hear from you that your citizens were so anxiously disposed to erect a public literary institution; for nothing can be a nobler ornament or a surer defence to a city than such an establishment properly formed. And I consider you, my friend, as meriting no small praise, for stimulating your fellow citizens to the maintenance and cultivation of letters. I promise you most readily all the assistance in my power, although I am not so ignorant of myself as not to perceive that I am incapable of fulfilling your wishes and your too partial opinion of me." (e) This journey in which he was accompanied by Camerarius was of a preparatory nature; in the ensuing year he visited Nuremberg for the purpose of establishing the academical institution and of giving his advice in the management of ecclesiastical affairs. So indefatigable was Melancthon in his attention to the interests of religion and literature! He was appointed to deliver an oration at the public opening of this academy, which is preserved in the volumes containing his select declamations.

(d) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theol. CAM. Vit. Mel.

The following passages are extracted from it:—

"Consider the manners and general course

(e) MELANCTH. Ep. p. 51. ad D. Hieronym. Baumgartn. 7.

of life for which those nations are distinguished, which are totally unacquainted with letters, as the Scythians. Having no cities under the regulation of wholesome laws and no courts of justice, those who prevail by force or faction dictate the law; commercial intercourse with neighbouring states is precluded; there can be no interchange of property; public robbery is the only means of escaping from the miseries of famine; every supply must depend upon the flesh or fowl accidentally procured, and not only is there no discipline at home, but even those domestic affections which are implanted in the human bosom, conjugal fidelity, parental tenderness, the attachments of consanguinity and friendship, become utterly extinguished by excessive barbarism. The science of education the foundation of future excellence is unknown, virtue is disregarded, no sense of propriety prevails, none of the assiduities of friendship, none of the charities of life; nor, finally, the least correctness of sentiment respecting the will of God to man and religion in general. Such is the cyclopic nature of savage life only with somewhat different shades and degrees of barbarism; and to this state these nations must always tend unless by imparting knowledge to them they become excited and formed to virtue, humanity and piety. You therefore have acted wisely and nobly by introducing learning into your city and studying to give it a permanent establishment from a conviction that it will be your best defence. In this tempestuous age, your zeal merits peculiar applause, because amidst the general storm that agitates the empire literature seems in danger of being wrecked.”

After this he proceeds to complain bitterly of the priesthood for their negligence of learning, and declares that their fraternity have shewn themselves the greatest enemies of the liberal arts, so that the institution at Nuremberg is peculiarly well-timed. “ And,” says he, “ do not be loth to add this to the other ornaments of your city which is already so distinguished for its wealth, its edifices and the ingenuity of its artificers, as to bear a comparison with the most celebrated cities of antiquity. There is not a place in Germany more remarkable for well informed citizens who having added the establishment of the liberal sciences to their excellent civil polity, will be long regarded as pre-eminent in rank above all the cities of the empire ; for it is impossible to express what an accession of honour to that already acquired, will result from the erection of this institution of useful learning.

“ If you proceed to cultivate these studies you will not only be illustrious in your own country but renowned abroad. You will be regarded as the authors of your country’s best defence, for ‘ no walls or bulwarks can prove more durable memorials of cities than the learning, wisdom and virtues of its citizens. A Spartan said, that their walls ought to be constructed of iron and not of stone, but I am of opinion that wisdom, moderation and piety, form a better protection than arms or walls."

The orator then endeavours to inspire and excite the citizens of Nuremberg to a noble emulation of Florence, which had been so distinguished for the encouragement of the exiled literati and the cultivation of Greek and Roman lore: at a time too when the Roman Pontiff refused the great Theodore Gaza the least remuneration for his laborious services. He traces the revival of letters in Europe to the example of Florence, representing it as "the harbour into which shipwrecked literature was received and secured."

He adds, "It is not only a sin against heaven, but betrays a brutal mind whenever any one refuses to exert himself for the proper instruction of his children. One great distinction between the human race and the brute creation is this, that nature teaches the animal to desist from all further care of its offspring as soon as it grows up, but enjoins it upon man not only to nourish his children during the first and infantine period of life, but as they rise into maturer age to cultivate their moral powers with increased assiduity and diligence.

“ In the proper constitution of a state, therefore, schools of learning are primarily requisite where the rising generation, which is the foundation of a future empire should be instructed, for it is a most fallacious idea to suppose that solid excellence is likely to be acquired without due regard to instruction ; nor can persons be suitably qualified to govern the state without the knowledge of those principles of right government which learning only can bestow.

“ Having devoted yourselves then to this object, do not be thwarted by the efforts of malice nor by any other difficulties thrown in the way to prevent the studies of your citizens. Respecting your professors, this we may venture to promise, that they are equal to the task they have undertaken and you may rely on the diligent discharge of their important office.

“ May the Lord Jesus Christ bestow his blessing upon these transactions, and abundantly prosper your counsels and the studies of your youth!”

It appears from a long letter addressed to the principal Senator of Nuremberg already mentioned, and with whom he maintained an uninterrupted correspondence of nearly thirty-seven years, that he was invited to occupy a professorship in the new institution, but he declines it in the most modest yet firm manner, assuring his friend that he felt the imperious nature of his obligations to his prince, and would rather perish with hunger than abandon the duties of his station at Wittemberg. (f)

During these almost innumerable public and private engagements which Melancthon represents as both oppressive to his mind and injurious to his health, (g) he contrived to compose and publish from time to time a variety of useful pieces; amongst which were several introductions to different books of Scripture, a Latin Version of the Proverbs of Solomon and an Epitome of the doctrines believed and taught in the reformed churches. The latter is inserted in the second volume of his works.

(f) “Dum, meâ operâ uti volet Princeps Fredericus non possum hinc honestè discedere. Nam cum is de me liberalissimè meritis sit præstandum est vicissim mihi, ne quid in ingratum putent collocatum esse. Itaque mihi curæ est persolvere, non modò quantum debeo sed etiam quantum ille sibi de me pollicetur. Malim equidem fame mori, quam ab officio discedere, præsertim cùm meo peccato literas ipsas non mediocris invidia gravarem τότε ἐὲ μοι χάνοι ευφραια χθῶν tunc verò mihi dehiscat lata terra, cum parum reveritus videbor dignitatem literarum.” Ep. ad Hieron. Baumgartnerum.

(g) “Nemo unquam servus in pistrino occupatior fuit, atque ego sum, tametsi nihil agere videar. Et valetudo est, ut scis, impar his laboribus, et malè me cruciant multa alia, quæ tua unius consuetudine mitigari omnia poterant.” MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. IV. 32. ad Joach. Camerar.

would doubtless have checked its growing prosperity and deferred its final triumphs. The wisdom of a super-intending Providence was most apparent in all these transactions. The policy and prudence of Frederic resulting from conscientious scruples blended with some apprehensions of the overawing domination of Rome, was admirably adapted to parry the repeated thrusts of ecclesiastical tyranny and to furnish opportunity for the Reformers to disseminate their principles; but when these had taken root it required a more decided protection and a firmer authority to favour the maturing harvest. John was of a bolder cast of mind than his deceased brother and avoided his temporizing caution, though it ought to be recorded to the honour of the latter, that a little previous to his death he had intended to give a more determined support to the reformed religion. The new Elector was warmly seconded by his son John Frederic. Philip, the Landgrave of Hesse also, might now be esteemed his zealous friend and coadjutor, for at a conference between the three princes at Creutzberg, he had most fully avowed the similarity of his views and determinations.

The Elector soon introduced important changes into the University and Collegiate church of Wittemberg. A new order of worship was provided, the Sacrament was administered in the German instead of the Latin language, and Luther transmitted to him the new ecclesiastical rites practised by the Reformers, and drawn up with the advice of Melancthon and Pomeranus. A general visitation of the Saxon churches was also promised.

In the mean time Charles V. in letters to his brother Ferdinand, had commanded a Diet to be held at Augsburg, which though he wrote from Toledo in May 1525, was not assembled till the following November and was then so thinly attended as to be prorogued to the third of May 1526, when the place was directed to be exchanged for Spire. The Elector availed himself of this opportunity to form an association between the chief cities and princes of the empire who were moderately disposed, for the purpose of representing to Ferdinand the danger of attempting to execute the decree of Worms. At length Ferdinand confessed the necessity of adopting pacific measures and allowed the princes to send such divines to the Diet as they judged most capable of giving advice. The Elector of Saxony directed a brief memorial to be prepared, containing a reply to the principal objections of the Papists. It was written in German by Melancthon: the following is a specimen. (h)

(h) The original manuscript is extant amongst the Acts of the Diet. Reg. E. fol. 37. Vide SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. II. p. 43.

“ The first question to be considered is, whether in preaching certain doctrines and omitting certain usages in opposition to the authority of the bishops and prelates we are guilty of schism; for though they cannot deny our doctrine they seek a pretext to condemn us from the alleged defect of authority from the ecclesiastics. They argue, 1. That the bishops possess authority in the church and no one else—2. The masses, monastic vows and other practices have prevailed for so many ages—but the church is infallible, therefore they cannot be abrogated.—3. To obey is better than sacrifice, we ought therefore to be obsequious.—4. Charity requires the toleration of human infirmity.—5. Civil commotion, to which disobedience to superiors would expose us, ought by every means to be avoided.”

“ To this it is replied :

“ The ministers of the gospel are bound by the precept of Jesus Christ, in Matthew x. 32. to preach the primary article of the Christian system, justification by faith in Christ and on no pretence to omit or conceal it. This doctrine has been greatly misapprehended and to the disparagement of Christ, mankind have placed an unwarrantable dependance on masses, invocation of saints and other works of their own: and these things though they are manifest blasphemies it is notorious have been taught in the Romish church and substituted for the merits of Christ. The Pope and the bishops neglect their duties, usurp authority over emperors and princes, and misapply the revenues of the church to tyrannical purposes; all this in the sacred name of Christ himself. Surely these are positive violations of the second commandment and require the interference of our assemblies [to rectify and remove.

“ On these grounds it is incumbent on the pastors of churches, from the very nature of their calling, to preach the truth, especially when the bishops allowing their authority, neglect to do it. In vain do our ministers both by their voice and their pen remonstrate; the only consequence is they subject themselves to persecution—but when placed in circumstances similar to Christ and his Apostles before Anna and Caiphaz, they can adopt the declaration of the primitive disciples, ‘ We ought to obey God rather than men.’

“ We deny that the Pope and the clergy constitute the true church, though it is granted there exist some among them who are real members of that church and who renounce the prevailing errors; for the true church consists of those and those only who have the word of God and are ‘ sanctified and cleansed.’—(Eph. v. 26.) The Holy Spirit expressly warns us against mistaking the Pope and his Clergy for THE CHURCH, for time the liberty of acting independently in religion till such an appointment. (i)

The Landgrave of Hesse, upon his return from the Diet, devoted himself with his characteristic ardour to the great and good work of promoting the reformation in his own dominions. He wrote letters to Melancthon soliciting his advice; who in reply urged the Landgrave to proceed in a gradual and cautious manner, con-vining for a time at certain non-essentials, the sudden abolition of which might be prejudicial to the cause he was desirous of promoting. He laments the contentions which subsisted amongst the Reformers themselves, frequently about trifles, which should by every means be avoided. The preachers of the gospel ought, he said, to inculcate not only the doctrines of faith, but the practices of piety, the fear of God, love to man, and obedience to magistrates. He besought his Highness to abstain from every attempt to extend the Reformation by military force; for the late occurrences of the rustic war would evince that they who delight in war should certainly be scattered. (k)
 X
 “The Romish Ecclesiastics instigate to war,

(i) Sleidan 149, 150.

(k) The impetuosity of this enterprising Prince could scarcely be restrained within proper limits. He was for the use of arms, but was checked by Melancthon, and by the Elector John, who acted with the advice of Luther. The latter de-

why do not the rest exhort men to gain a knowledge of the subject, and to preserve peace? Your Highness I am convinced might do a great deal with the Princes, if you would exhort them to take pains to understand the points in dispute, and endeavour to terminate these contentions.” (1)

During the two years of peace to the reformed churches which succeeded the Diet of Spires, the Elector of Saxony employed himself in the very important work of regulating ecclesiastical affairs. Preparatory to a general visitation by persons suitably authorized and accomplished for the undertaking, Melancthon composed a directory for the use of the churches, which was published under the immediate sanction of the Elector. It is divided into eighteen sections, comprehending the doctrine of Forgiveness and Justification by faith in Christ—the Law—Prayer—the Endurance of Tribulation—Baptism—the Lord’s Supper—Repentance—Confession—the Atonement—Public Worship—Marriage—Freedom of the Will—Christian Liberty—the Turkish War—the mode of Preaching—Excommunication—the Office of Superelared, “ If the Landgrave were determined to have recourse to arms, it would be better for the Elector to dissolve alliance with him: but if force were to be first used by their adversaries, they then had a right to repel it.”

intendants or Bishops—Public Schools of Literature. The arrangement of these divisions might perhaps be criticised, but the whole appears to have been written with the author's characteristic skill and perspicuity. A preface, at the Elector's request, was prefixed by Luther.

This publication, called Libellus Visitatorius, involved some unpleasant consequences to Melancthon. The Papists professed to discover in it a defection from many of the sentiments of Luther, and hailed the imaginary difference with a prodigious but premature exultation. It cannot be doubted that such a circumstance was eagerly desired, and it must be confessed would have been worthy their mutual congratulations. Luther despised the charge.—“Let our adversaries,” says he, “glory in their lies, as they always do, for they take no pleasure in truth.” And again, “Their glorying is a miserable one, and will be of no long continuance; but let them solace themselves with their vain hopes and joys, as they often do, and let them swell and bluster, I am very well pleased.” (m)

At the same time Melancthon discloses a secret in a letter to his confidential friend Camerarius.

X “I am applied to from Bohemia to desert the Reformed Cause, and promised any remuneration from King Ferdinand. Indeed my defection is publicly reported as a fact, because in the little book written for the reformed churches I have shewn an increased degree of moderation, and yet you perceive I have really inserted nothing different from what Luther constantly maintains. But because I have employed no asperity of language, these very acute men judge that I necessarily differ from Luther.”(n) Cochlæus does not scruple to charge Melancthon with a crafty moderation, and Luther with a change of sentiment; (o) but as Seckendorf observes, “Nothing better than such malignant insinuations was to be expected from him.”

(m) LUTH. Ep. Lib. II. ad Spal. p. 345, 351.

But the tauntings and misrepresentations of avowed adversaries were far less vexatious than the conduct of a friend and fellow-labourer. In the first article of the Libellus Visitatorius, the pastors of churches were admonished to instruct the people in the nature of true repentance, and to be careful not to separate repentance from the doctrine of faith, the former of which was stated to originate in the fear of divine judgments, and a just impression of the terrors of the Law; lest the vulgar should imagine that the remission of sins was attainable without the exercise of a penitent and contrite spirit. They were to press the consciences of men on this subject, and urge to repentance, to prevent their placing dependance on any personal merit, for salvation. John Agricola, Chaplain to Count Mansfield, and his attendant at the Diet of Spires, loudly exclaimed against this advice, affirming that it was improper to make these statements and appeals to the common people, and that instead of attempting to work upon their fears, and terrify their consciences, they should be exhorted to faith in God as the commencement and essence of real religion. Instead of candidly representing his objections to Melancthon himself, he vociferated his complaints to the Papists, and it seems highly probable, from his whole conduct, that his intentions were to purchase a great name by obtruding himself forward as the head of a new party. In this he succeeded, for he became founder of the sect of the Antimonians, and afterwards a preacher at the court of Berlin.

(n) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. III. 72. ad Cam.

(o) COCH. fol. 80.

Melancthon fully expresses his sentiments on the subject in his letters, one of which addressed to Justus Jonas, and not to be found amongst the published volumes of his correspondence, deserves to be noticed. (p) He begins by expressing his wish that Agricola had shewn a more friendly spirit, and that instead of circulating his censures throughout Germany, even in Leipsic, and in the very court of Duke George, he had first informed him privately of any thing which he conceived objectionable in his writing. He then alludes to certain transactions relative to this document and the visitation, in the presence of the Elector, Luther, Pomeranus, and others. Agricola referred to Luther as having stated that repentance originated in the love of righteousness; quoted the story of the heathen mariners in JONAH, and said that Christ commanded repentance to be preached in his name, and not in the name of Moses. To this Melancthon replies, that terrors of conscience must exist previous to justification, and these terrors seem to originate more in the fear of punishment than the love of righteousness. Agricola answers, that contrition arises from faith in the divine threatenings—but what, says Melancthon, is faith in the divine threatenings but the fear of them? Nothing, he says, offends his opponent more than that in the second article it is ordered that the ten commandments be taught; because we are free from the law, and ought to study rather the writings of Paul; to which it is answered, that Paul enforces the law, and Christ himself taught it and explained its obligatory nature. Agricola, laughably enough, objects that Christ only spoke to the Jews. This war of words was sufficiently disagreeable to the amiable Melancthon, and he informs Jonas, that he had thrice solicited Agricola to bury what had passed in oblivion, and to renew their former friendship; but that salvation. John Agricola, Chaplain to Count Mansfield, and his attendant at the Diet of Spires, loudly exclaimed against this advice, affirming that it was improper to make these statements and appeals to the common people, and that instead of attempting to work upon their fears, and terrify their consciences, they should be exhorted to faith in God as the commencement and essence of real religion. Instead of candidly representing his objections to Melancthon himself, he vociferated his complaints to the Papists, and it seems highly probable, from his whole conduct, that his intentions were to purchase a great name by obtruding himself forward as the head of a new party. In this he succeeded, for he became founder of the sect of the Antimonians, and afterwards a preacher at the court of Berlin.

(p) It is preserved in Biblioth. Paulin. Lipsiensi.

Melancthon fully expresses his sentiments on the subject in his letters, one of which addressed to Justus Jonas, and not to be found amongst the published volumes of his correspondence, deserves to be noticed. (p) He begins by expressing his wish that Agricola had shewn a more friendly spirit, and that instead of circulating his censures throughout Germany, even in Leipsic, and in the very court of Duke George, he had first informed him privately of any thing which he conceived objectionable in his writing. He then alludes to certain transactions relative to this document and the visitation, in the presence of the Elector, Luther, Pomeranus, and others. Agricola referred to Luther as having stated that repentance originated in the love of righteousness; quoted the story of the heathen mariners in JONAH, and said that Christ commanded repentance to be preached in his name, and not in the name of Moses. To this Melancthon replies, that terrors of conscience must exist previous to justification, and these terrors seem to originate more in the fear of punishment than the love of righteousness. Agricola answers, that contrition arises from faith in the divine threatenings—but what, says Melancthon, is faith in the divine threatenings but the fear of them? Nothing, he says, offends his opponent more than that in the second article it is ordered that the ten commandments be taught; because we are free from the law, and ought to study rather the writings of Paul; to which it is answered, that Paul enforces the law, and Christ himself taught it and explained its obligatory nature. Agricola, laughably enough, objects that Christ only spoke to the Jews. This war of words was sufficiently disagreeable to the amiable Melancthon, and he informs Jonas, that he had thrice solicited Agricola to bury what had passed in oblivion, and to renew their former friendship; but that he treated his overture with contemptuous silence. This disagreement however assumed so serious an aspect in the opinion of the Elector, that he immediately interposed; and summoning Melancthon, Agricola, and Luther to Torgau, stopped the further progress of the dispute for the present by an amicable adjustment. (q)

(p) It is preserved in Biblioth. Paulin. Lipsiensis.

The commissioners appointed for the great purpose of inspecting the state of the reformed churches, were twenty-eight in number, consisting of laymen and ecclesiastics. They were distributed into parties according to the different provinces. Melancthon, with five others, namely, John a Planitz, a knight, Jerome Schurff, Erasmus, (not of Rotterdam) Frederic Myconius, and Justus Menius, a clergyman of Eisenach, inspected Thuringia; Luther, Justus Jonas, Pomeranus, Spalatine, and other persons of eminence, were appointed in the general commission. All of them diligently laboured to fix suitable pastors in the respective parishes, to abolish ancient superstitions, to regulate the public seminaries; in a word to promote general good order and religious improvement. X

The second Diet of Spires was convened in the year 1529. A pleasant anecdote is related of the Landgrave of Hesse on this occasion. Faber, Bishop of Vienna, intending to ridicule the Reformers, seeing the letters V. D. M. I. Æ.

upon the sleeves of some of the courtiers of the Landgrave, chose to interpret them “Verbum Dei Manet Im Ermel;” i. e. The word of God remains in the sleeves: to which the Landgrave immediately replied, “No, this is not the meaning, but Verbum Diaboli Manet in Episcopis;” i. e. The word of the devil remains in the Bishops. The real signification of the letters however was, Verbum Dei Manet In Æternam; i. e. The word of God remains for ever. (r).

A curious circumstance occurred at this convocation, which Melancthon relates in his Commentary on the angelic appearance mentioned in the tenth chapter of Daniel, and which he affirms was but one out of many of a similar nature, which he could fully authenticate. The case was briefly this. Simon Grynæus, a very intimate friend of his, and at this period Greek Professor in the University of Heidelberg, who combined profound erudition with zealous piety, came over unexpectedly to see him at Spires. He ventured to encounter Faber, and to urge him closely on some of the topics in discussion between the Catholics and the Reformers. The Bishop, who was plausible, but shallow, fearful of engaging in argument, but cruelly ready to use the sword, pretended that private business with the king required his attention at that moment, but that he felt extremely desirous of the friendship of Grynæus, and of another opportunity of discussing the controverted points. No dissembler himself, Grynæus returned to his friends without the least suspicion of the wily courtier's intentions; nor could any of them have known it, but for what Melancthon deemed a supernatural interference. They were just sitting down to supper, and Grynæus had related part of the conversation between himself and the Bishop, when Melancthon was suddenly called out of the room to an old man whom he had never seen or heard of, or could afterwards discover, characterized by a most observable peculiarity of manner and dress, and who said, that persons by the king's authority would soon arrive to seize Grynæus, and put him in prison, Faber having influenced him to this persecuting measure. He enjoined that instant means should be adopted to secure the departure of Grynæus to a place of safety, and urged that there should not be a moment's delay. Upon communicating this information he immediately withdrew. Melancthon and his friends instantly bestirred themselves, and saw him safe across the Rhine. It afterwards appeared that the king's messengers were in the house almost as soon as they had left it, but Grynæus was out of the reach of danger; a danger, as Melancthon remarks, easily imagined by those who were acquainted with Faber's cruelty. He says they were all of opinion that this was a divine interposition, so singular was the appearance of the old man, and so rapid the movements of the instrument of vengeance, from whose power Gry-næus scarcely escaped. (s)

(r) VAN DE CORPUT, Leven ende Dood P. Mel. p. 155.

Such is the narrative which the reader is put in possession of without note or comment. Some will think it supernatural, others will exclaim, Credat Judæus Apella, and many perhaps will consider it, though remarkable, capable of explanation without allowing it to have been miraculous. The use Melancthon makes of the statement must be admitted to be worthy of his exalted piety; "Let us," says he "be grateful to God who sends his angels to be our protectors, and let us with increased tranquillity of mind fulfil the duties assigned us."

At this Diet the former decree, which allowed every Prince to manage his own ecclesiastical affairs as he thought proper till the appointment of a general council, was revoked; all farther innovation in religion was interdicted, the celebration of mass was nowhere to be disallowed, and the Anabaptists were made subject to capital punishment. (t) The resolutions of the first Diet had been carried unanimously, they were revoked, merely by a majority of Catholic votes procured by imperial influence. The arguments and remonstrances of the Reformers were useless, and the only measure left them to adopt was to enter a solemn protest against this decree which they did on the nineteenth of April; whence they acquired the name of PROTESTANTS. The first who thus obtained this glorious distinction were JOHN, ELECTOR OF SAXONY, GEORGE, ELECTOR OF BRANDENBURG, ERNEST AND FRANCIS, DUKES OF LUNENBURG, PHILIP, LANDGRAVE OF HESSE, and WOLFGANG, PRINCE OF ANHALT. They were seconded by thirteen or fourteen imperial cities.

(s) MELANCTH. Op. Tom. 2. in Comment ad Cap. X. Danielis. CAM. Vit. Mel. MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Philosophorum in vit. Sim. Gryn.

(t) SLEID. 171, Goldast III. 495.

The ambassadors commissioned by these noble Dissenters to communicate their proceedings to the Emperor in Spain, were immediately arrested upon their arrival. This unwarrantable violence only tended to strengthen their union and they held various meetings at Roth, Nuremberg and Smalcald, to concert measures for mutual defence. The Elector of Saxony however instructed by Luther and Melancthon, shewed a disinclination to form a military association and nothing decisive resulted at present from these deliberations.

The anxiety of Melancthon, who had accompanied the Elector to the Diet was extreme. During all these transactions he and Luther with whom a perpetual communication was maintained, were constantly consulted. In every struggle and difficulty they largely participated, for on them it depended in a great measure to pilot the new-launched vessel through the tempestuous seas. Melancthon was sometimes entreated by his friends who witnessed his extreme agitation, to suppress these anxieties and dismiss trouble from his mind. To which he would piously reply, “if I had no anxieties I should lose a powerful incentive to prayer; but when the cares of life impel to devotion, the best means of consolation, a religious mind cannot do without them. Thus trouble compels me to pray, and prayer drives away trouble.” (u)

Availing himself of a favourable opportunity, he went from Spires to pay a short visit to his mother. In the course of conversation she mentioned to her son the manner in which she was accustomed to attend to her devotions, and the form she generally used which was free from the prevailing superstitions. “But what,” said she, “am I to believe amidst so many different opinions of the present day?”—“Go on,” replied Melancthon, “believe and pray as you now do and have done before—and do not disturb yourself about the disputes and controversies of the times.” (x)

The Sacramental controversy between the (u) CAM. Vit. Mel.

(x) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 333.

divines of Saxony and Switzerland continued to rage with unabated violence, neither party being disposed to retract in the smallest degree. Oecolampadius strongly solicited Melancthon to declare in favour of Zuinglius and the Sacramentarians, to which he ingenuously replied, "that after due examination he could not approve of their opinion, not finding sufficient reason in the literal sense of the words—that if he were to act in a politic manner he should speak otherwise, knowing there were many learned men among the Sacramentarians whose friendship would be advantageous to him, so that if he could have concurred in their opinion about the Lord's Supper he would have spoken freely. The Zuinglians supposed, he said, the body of Christ to be absent and only represented in the Sacrament, as persons are represented in a theatre, but he considered that Jesus Christ had promised to be with us even to the end of the world—that it is not necessary to separate the divinity from the humanity—he was persuaded therefore the Sacrament was a pledge of the real presence and that the body of Christ was truly received in the Lord's Supper—that the proper import of the words 'this is my body,' was not contrary to any article of faith, but agreed with other passages in Scripture where the presence of Christ was mentioned—and that it was unbecoming a Christian to believe that Jesus Christ is as it were imprisoned in heaven—that Oecolampadius had only alluded to some absurdities and the opinion of some of the fathers against it, neither of which ought to influence those who know that the mysteries of religion are to be judged by the word of God and not by mathematical principles, and that the writings of the ancients abound in contradictions; but, he said the greatest number of the expressions in the most eminent writers, proves the doctrine of the real presence to be the general sense of the church.) He desires Oecolampadius to consider the importance of the question in dispute and the ill consequences of maintaining his opinion with so much warmth of temper, and adds, it would be very proper for some good men to confer together on the subject.” To the latter proposition Oecolampadius in his reply most cordially assents. (y)

Some years previous to this period Melancthon had thus expressed himself in a letter to Camerarius; “ I commit the affair to Christ that his divine wisdom may best consult his own glory. I have hitherto always entertained the hope that he would by some means make it plain what is the true doctrine of the Sacrament.” It is deplorable that such men as Luther and Melancthon should have wandered so long in darkness; yet be it remembered, that though they erred it was from a most anxious solicitude of mind to adhere rigidly to scriptural statements. (They urged the very words of Christ as their authority, but unhappily misinterpreted them.)

The excellent Landgrave of Hesse, with a view to the adjustment of the differences which had so long subsisted amongst the principal reformers respecting the sacrament, procured a friendly conference at Marpurg a city in his dominions. It took place in October. The leaders on both sides first held a private conference, Luther with Oecolampadius and Melancthon with Zuinglius. The prince, his courtiers and chief counsellors were present at the public disputation, which was conducted on the one side by Zuinglius, Oecolampadius, Bucer, Hedio, Jacob Sturm, a senator of Strasburg, Ulrich Funch, a senator of Zurich, and Rudolphus Frey of Basil; on the other by Luther, Melancthon, Eberhard, Thane of Eisenach, Justus Jonas, Casper Cruciger, and others. Jonas describes Zuinglius as rude and forward, Oecolampadius as remarkably mild, Hedio no less liberal and good, and Bucer keen and cunning as a fox.

It appears that the Swiss and Saxon reformers discussed a variety of other topics, in which they either did or supposed themselves to differ, and though both parties afterwards claimed the victory there is every reason to rely on the statement of Melancthon. “Zuinglius,” he says, “readily gave up several things which he had advanced in his writings, particularly his notion of original sin, and came over to the Wittemberg divines in all points, the single article of the Lord’s Supper excepted.” (z)

No doubt can be entertained that each of the Protestant parties retired from this conference with too much self-satisfaction, and the Papists ridiculed the Landgrave for his pious zeal. (a) If however the great purpose of perfect agreement were not obtained, it is much to their honour that all parties signed the following statement in reference to the excepted article in Melancthon’s report. “We all agree in believing that the Lord’s Supper is to be administered in both kinds conformably to its original institution, but that the mass ought not to be practised to procure mercy for the quick or the dead—that the Sacrament is truly a Sacrament of the body and blood of Jesus Christ, and that to eat of his body and blood in a spiritual sense is absolutely necessary for every Christian. We agree also respecting the utility of the Sacrament that like his holy word it is administered and appointed by God to promote the faith and joy of his feeble and dependant people through the agency of the Holy Spirit. BUT THOUGH WE ARE NOT YET AGREED WHETHER THE BODY AND BLOOD OF CHRIST BE CORPOREALLY PRESENT IN THE BREAD AND WINE, YET AS FAR AS CONSCIENCE PERMITS, EACH PARTY SHALL MANIFEST A CHRISTIAN AFFECTION TO THE OTHER, AND BOTH SHALL EARNESTLY IMPLORE ALMIGHTY GOD THAT HE WOULD BY HIS SPIRIT LEAD AND ESTABLISH US IN WHATEVER IS THE TRUTH!"

(z) MEL. in Scult. 198. in Hosp. 80—82. Lit. Jonæ ad Gulielm. Reiffenstein ap. SECK. Lib. II. p. 139.

(a) “De conventu hoc Marpurgensi ab omnium partium scriptoribus agitur: Pontificiis, qui, ut noster hic, conatum Landgravii inutilem irrident; Zuinglio cum suis, qui argumentandi acumine potiores sibi fuisse visi sunt: Nostris qui Luthero constantiæ et firmitatis laudem asserunt.” SECK. Hist. Luth. Lib. II. Sect. xvii. p. 137.

In the present year Luther wrote a preface to the second edition of Melancthon's Commentary on the Epistle to the Colossians. He speaks of it as a book small in size, but great in point of matter and useful tendency, and affirms with extraordinary frankness that he preferred the writings of Melancthon to his own, and was much more desirous that they should be published and read. "I," says he, "am born to be for ever fighting with opponents and with the devil himself, which gives a controversial and warlike cast to all my works. I clear the ground of stumps and trees, root up thorns and briars, fill up ditches, raise causeways and smooth the roads through the wood: but to Philip Melancthon it belongs by the grace of God to perform a milder and more grateful labour—to build, to plant, to sow, to water, to please by elegance and taste. O happy circumstance, and shame to their ingratitude who are not sensible of it! Had such a publication as this appeared twenty years ago what an invaluable treasure would it have been esteemed! But now, we resemble the Israelites who loathed the manna and sighed for the garlic and the onions of Egypt. A time will come when the loss of such advantages will be deplored in vain.”

So strong and so inviolable was the mutual friendship of these noble-minded Reformers. No root of bitterness grew in either bosom—no jealousy or envy divided them. Their only ambition seemed to be to promote each other’s reputation and to strengthen the common cause by zealous co-operation.

CHAP. VIII.

A. D. 1530.

Brief Notice of General Affairs—Appointment of the Diet of Augsburg—Translation of the AUGSBURG CONFESSION—Popish Confutation—Subsequent Proceedings—Melancthon's Apology—Decree of the Diet—Deliberation of the Reformers—Striking Anecdote of Melancthon—Anecdote of the Archbishop of Mentz.

SCRUPULOUSLY avoiding the minute and intricate transactions of general history, excepting so far as they may be requisite to connect the parts of this narrative together, it will not be expected that the progress of the Turkish war, or the contentions of the Emperor, the Pope, and the King of France, should be detailed. Suffice it simply to allude to these circumstances, that the wonderful movements of providence at this period may be duly remarked. The Pope and the Emperor were both sufficiently disposed to exert their respective authority as the heads of civil and ecclesiastical affairs, to extinguish the still increasing light of the Reformation. They were anxious to enforce the intolerant edict of Worms, and to concert measures for the more effectual annihilation by force of the Lutheran heresy. But at the very time when it is probable their efforts would have been most alarming, and when urged by the papal party to exert their formidable power, they were prevented from executing their purpose by personal contentions, as well as by the hostility of a foreign enemy.

During some years France, Spain and Italy had been in a state of commotion, and after the battle of Pavia, in which Francis was defeated, the Roman Pontiff becoming uneasy at the growing power of the Emperor, entered into a league against him, which so exasperated Charles, that in the year 1527 he rushed into Italy, laid siege to Rome, and blockaded Clement in the castle of St. Angelo. Their differences however being at length adjusted, they were mutually pledged to the extirpation of Protestantism.

The appointment of a Diet at Augsburg to deliberate on the Turkish war, and on the existing disputes in religion, forms a new era in the history of the Reformation. Charles V. was personally present. He arrived on the thirteenth, and the first session was held on the twentieth of June. (b) The Elector of Saxony selected his most eminent divines to accompany him.

(b) DUPIN's Eccles. Hist. B. II. Ch. 22. p. 115.

Luther, who could not with safety or propriety have appeared at Augsburg after being proscribed by the edict of Worms, was left at Coburg in Franconia, at a convenient distance for consultation, so that the principal labour and responsibility devolved upon Melancthon.

It had been deemed adviseable to prepare a statement of all the principal articles of the Protestant faith, in order to put the Emperor in full possession of the subject of dispute pending between the Papal and Reformed parties, and to facilitate the dispatch of ecclesiastical affairs. Luther and his friends had already sent a concise paper to the Elector of Saxony at his own request while at Torgau, on his road to the Diet. It consisted of seventeen articles, which had been already discussed in the conferences at Sultzbach and Smalcald. (c)

The Princes however solicited the pen of Melancthon to draw up a more extended and accurate statement. It was an important undertaking, and a critical moment. He naturally felt anxious for his own reputation, and while it was his desire to avoid unnecessary offence, he felt as a man of piety the paramount duty he owed to God and to his conscience. Often did he weep over the page—often did he complain with sentiments of genuine humility of his own incompetency. (d)

(c) Comm. de Luth. XLII. 4. & XLVIII. & Add.

(d) CAM. Vit. Mel.

At length the celebrated Confession of Augsburg was completed. Luther's advice had been constantly sought, and there is no reason to doubt, while the mildness of the language scarcely comported with the vehemence of his temper, the skill displayed, and the sentiments stated met with his entire approbation. (e) It was translated into almost all the languages of Europe, and read in the courts of kings and princes. (f)

Melancthon was desirous that it should be signed by the Theologians only of the reformed party, alleging as a reason, that the Princes would then be more at liberty to use their influence in promoting their mutual wishes; but he could not succeed. (g)

After the dispatch of other business the Protestant princes requested the Emperor to allow their confession to be publicly read. This he would not permit in a full Diet, but commanding them to intrust it to him promised it should be read the next day in his palace; they however petitioned to reserve it. The next day

(e) Dupin says, that after revising and correcting it several times, he could hardly please Luther at last. Maimbourg on the contrary represents it as being highly gratifying to him. Seckendorf favours the statement of Maimbourg, by saying Luther was glad of this occasion to let the world see what he and his friends believed.

(f) SECK.

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel.

in a special assembly of princes and other members of the empire, it was presented to his Imperial Majesty in Latin and German, with the offer to explain any thing which might appear obscure, and an assurance that they would refer the points of difference in religion to a general council. (h)

The reader shall now have an opportunity of inspecting this far-famed performance. (i) It will be found to contain many sentiments which to most Christians will appear strange, and which we should be very far from defending, but have nevertheless thought it our duty faithfully to represent them. Let the reader bear in mind that the Reformers are to be honoured chiefly for the grand principles of Christian liberty which they so strenuously asserted and maintained in the face of the most powerful opponents; the detail of doctrine and practice will always occasion difference of opinion. That they were too tenacious of their particular creed and in many cases inconsistent with themselves cannot be denied—but this period was only the dawn of religious discovery, and it is not to be wondered at that objects appeared to them at first in a very indistinct manner. Many alterations were made in subsequent editions of this very document. They were perpetually, with the zeal of the reformers and the genuine humility of Christians, correcting their own errors.

(h) DUPIN'S Eccles. Hist. B. II. p. 116.

(i) Cœlestine in his history of the Diet of Augsburg, has inserted a summary of the Protestant faith in seventeen articles said to have been previously sent to Charles V. and which he imputes to Melancthon. He represents it as written at the request of Alphonsus Valdesius, Spanish Secretary to the Emperor, who said his Imperial Majesty had intimated his wish for such a statement. But Seckendorf assigns several satisfactory reasons for not believing it to be the production of Melancthon. It is written with considerable acrimony, and would have exposed him to great personal danger; it is not probable he would have done it without consulting Luther; such a proceeding would have been inconsistent with his natural timidity of disposition; and his learned biographer Camerarius mentions nothing of such a composition. CŒLESTIN. Hist. Comit. August. Tom. I. SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. II. p. 165—167.

THE AUGSBURG CONFESSION

As presented to Charles V. June 25th, A. D. 1530.

ART. I.

“ Our churches are perfectly agreed that the Nicene decree respecting the unity of the divine essence and the three persons of the godhead is true and worthy of the fullest belief; namely, that there is one divine essence which is called and which is God, eternal, incorporeal, indivisible, infinite in power, wisdom and goodness, the Creator and preserver of all things visible and invisible; and yet there are three persons co-equal in power and essence, and co-eternal, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. The term person is used in the same sense as ecclesiastical writers have employed it, to denote a proper subsistence in distinction from a part or quality. Hence our churches condemn every heresy upon this subject that has arisen, as that of the Manichæans who assert two principles, the good and the evil, the Valentinians, Arians, Eunomians, Mahometans and all others of a similar description. They condemn also the Samosatenes both ancient and modern, who contend that there is only one person and speak of the word and the Holy Spirit in a very wily and wicked manner, affirming that there are no distinct persons, but that the Word signifies a mere voice, and the Spirit an influence or motion created in things.

ART. II.

“They teach also that since the fall of Adam, all men are naturally born in sin, destitute of the fear of God and faith in him, and full of concupiscence; and that this disease or original depravity is sinful, even now condemning and exposing to eternal death all who are not born again by baptism and the Holy Spirit.

“They condemn the Pelagians and others who deny the sinful nature of this original depravity, disparaging the benefits which Christ dispenses to the exaltation of human merit, and contending that a man is justified before God by his own powers of reason.

ART. III.

“ They also teach that the word, or Son of God assumed human nature in the Virgin’s womb, in such a manner that the two natures the divine and the human were inseparably united in the one person of Christ, truly God and truly man, born of the Virgin Mary, who really suffered, was crucified, dead and buried, that he might reconcile the Father to us, by his expiatory sacrifice for both original and actual sins. He descended to the dead (ad inferos), and rising again on the third day ascended into heaven to sit at the Father’s right hand, to reign for ever over all creation and to sanctify all who believe in him, by sending his Spirit into their hearts to rule, console and quicken them, that they may be able to resist the devil and the power of sin. Also Christ will return to judge the quick and the dead, &c. according to the Apostle’s Creed.

ART. IV.

“ They teach also that men cannot be justified before God by their own efforts, merits or works, but are justified freely through Christ by faith, and are received into favour and enjoy the remission of sins through Christ, who by his death presented a satisfaction for sin.

“ God imputes this faith for justification before him. Rom. iii. and iv.

ART. V.

“The ministry of the gospel and the administration of Sacraments were instituted that we might obtain this faith; for the word and the Sacraments are used as instruments by the Holy Spirit for the communication of faith, and wherever it is seen in those who hear the gospel; that is, God justifies not for our merits but for Christ’s sake.

“They condemn the Anabaptists and others, who suppose that the Holy Spirit comes to men through their own works and preparations without the external word.

ART. VI.

“They teach also that faith ought to be visible in its fruits, and that though good works are to be done as commanded and conformable to the will of God, we are not to confide in them as meritorious for justification before him. For remission of sin and justification are apprehended by faith, as Christ testifies: ‘Having done all these things say we are unprofitable servants.’

The ancient writers of the church teach the same doctrine. Ambrose says, ‘This is the appointment of God, that whosoever believes in Christ shall be saved without works, by faith only receiving the remission of sins.’

ART. VII.

“They teach also that the one holy church will continue for ever; but that this church consists of a congregation of holy persons in which the gospel is rightly taught and the Sacraments rightly administered; and as to true unity in the church, it is sufficient to agree concerning the doctrine of the gospel and the administration of Sacraments. Nor is it universally necessary that human traditions, rites, or ceremonies instituted by men be the same in all places; so Paul says, ‘ One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, &c.’

ART. VIII.

“ Although the church is properly a congregation of holy persons and genuine believers, yet as there is a great mixture of characters in this world, hypocrites and wicked persons, it is lawful to use the Sacraments although administered by the wicked according to the language of Christ; ‘ The Scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses’s seat,’ &c. so that the Sacraments and the word of God become efficacious through the appointment and command of Christ, even though dispensed by wicked persons.

“ They condemn the Donatists and such persons as deny the lawfulness of making use of the ministry of the wicked in the church, considering such a ministry useless and inefficacious.

ART. IX.

“ They teach concerning baptism that it is necessary to Salvation, because by baptism the grace of God is offered. Infants are to be baptized, who being brought to God by baptism are received into his favour. They condemn the Anabaptists who disallow the baptism of infants and affirm that they may be saved without it.

ART. X.

“ They teach respecting the Lord’s Supper that the body and blood of Christ are truly present, and are distributed to the recipients; and disapprove of those who teach otherwise.

ART. XI.

“ Concerning confession they teach that private absolution may be retained in the churches, although in making confession it is not necessary that every particular delinquency should be enumerated. This indeed is impossible according to the language of the Psalmist, ‘ Who can understand his errors ?’

ART. XII.

“ Concerning penitence they teach that the remission of sins may be obtained by such as fall after baptism whenever they repent; and that the church should bestow absolution upon such returning penitents. But repentance may be divided into two parts, the one is contrition or the terrors which agitate the conscience under a sense of guilt; the other is, the faith derived from the gospel, or from absolution and which believes that sin is pardoned for the sake of Christ, and the conscience pacified and released from its alarms. Upon this good works ought to follow as the fruit of repentance.

“ They condemn the Anabaptists who deny that once being justified it is possible to lose the Holy Spirit, as well as those who contend that a sinless perfection is attainable in the present life. They condemn also the Novatians who refuse to absolve such as have fallen after baptism even upon their return to repentance; and they are rejected who assert that the remission of sins is not connected with faith, but is obtained by our charity and good works. They also are rejected who teach that Canonical satisfactions are necessary to make amends for eternal punishment or the pains of purgatory.

ART. XIII.

“ Concerning the use of Sacraments, they teach that the Sacraments are instituted not only as the signs to men of our religious profession, but rather as the signs and evidences of the will of God to us to quicken and confirm the faith of those who observe them. The Sacraments are to be used therefore, that faith may be increased through believing the promises particularly exhibited and impressed by Sacraments. They condemn therefore those who teach that the Sacraments can justify as works of merit, denying that faith is requisite in the reception of them.

ART. XIV.

“ Concerning church order, they maintain that no one ought to teach publicly or to administer the Sacraments unless he be lawfully called.

ART. XV.

“ Concerning rites in the church, they teach that those rites are to be observed which can be observed without sin and which conduce to the peace and good order of the church: such as certain holidays and feasts. But in reference to these things men are to be admonished lest their consciences should be burdened with the idea that such worship is essential to Salvation. They must also be admonished that human traditions instituted with a view of pleasing God, purchasing his favour and atoning for sin are contrary to the gospel and the doctrine of faith. Hence vows, traditions respecting meats and drinks, &c. instituted to purchase divine favour and satisfy for sins are useless and contrary to the gospel.

ART. XVI.

“ Concerning civil matters they teach that lawful civil appointments are good in the sight of God and that Christians may exercise the office of a magistrate, may judge according to imperial and other existing laws, inflict legal punishments, declare war, take up the military profession, make lawful contracts, hold property, take an oath upon the requisition of a magistrate, marry and trade.

“ They condemn the Anabaptists who forbid the exercise of those civil offices by Christians, and they condemn those who do not place evangelical perfection in the fear of God and in faith, but in abandoning civil offices because the gospel recommends the righteousness of the heart ; it does not however abrogate political institutions, but requires the preservation of them as ordinances of God and in such ordinances to exercise charity. It becomes Christians therefore to obey their own magistrates and laws, excepting when they command them to do evil, in which case we must obey God rather than men. Acts v.

ART. XVII.

“ They teach that Christ will appear in judgment at the end of the world, that he will raise the dead and bestow eternal life and everlasting felicity on his holy and elect people ; but he will condemn wicked men and devils to endless torment.

“ They condemn the Anabaptists who imagine there will be a termination to the punishment of wicked men and devils; and also others who are dispersing the Jewish notions that previous to the resurrection of the dead the righteous will occupy a worldly kingdom and oppress the wicked.

ART. XVIII.

“ Concerning free will they teach that the human will is in a certain sense and in reference to civil concerns and the exercise of reason, free; but it has no efficiency in spiritual concerns without the Holy Spirit, because the natural man does not perceive the things of the Spirit. they are impressed upon the heart by means of the word through the agency of the Holy Spirit. Augustine delivers the same doctrine in his Hypognosticon, Lib. III.—We admit that the will is free in all men who can judge according to reason, not indeed in divine things to begin or go forward independently of God, but only in what pertains to the present life both good and evil. I say good referring to those things which arise out of our natural welfare, as the cultivation of the soil, eating and drinking, friendship, clothing, preparing a residence, marrying, tending cattle, acquiring the knowledge of various arts and whatever pertains to the welfare of the present life; all which things subsisting alone are conducted without a divine direction. By the term evil I referred to the worship of idols, murder, &c.

“They condemn the Pelagians and others who teach that we are able to please God supremely without the Holy Spirit and by the power of nature alone ; and substantially to obey his precepts. For though nature can in some respects perform external works, as abstaining from theft and murder, it cannot command internal affections as the fear of God, faith in him, purity, patience, &c.

ART. XIX.

“Concerning the cause of sin they teach that though God is the Creator and preserver of our nature, Sin originates entirely in the will of evil beings, namely, devils and wicked men, which apart from divine influence turns them aside from God ; Christ says of the devil, ‘ When he speaketh a lie he speaketh of his own.’ John viii.

ART. XX.

“Our churches are falsely accused of prohibiting good works, for their writings now extant, concerning the Ten Commandments, and others, testify that they have given salutary instructions respecting every duty of life, what kind of life and what works in every different situation please God. Formerly public instructors taught little of these things, but urged the practice of puerile and needless observances, as certain feasts, fasts, fraternizations, peregrinations, worship of saints, rosaries,^(k) and the like. Our adversaries have now learned to do without these useless things and not to preach them up so much as formerly. They moreover begin to speak of faith respecting which they were before wonderfully silent, although they still obscure the real doctrine of faith by disregarding trembling consciences and commanding the observances of good works in order to merit the forgiveness of sin.

“ As therefore the doctrine of faith which ought to be regarded as of prime importance in the church, was so long spoken of in an ignorant manner, however it was admitted to be necessary by all, the most profound silence reigning in public discourses respecting justification by faith though the doctrine of works was continually canvassed, it was deemed proper to admonish the churches on the subject of faith.

“ In the first place our works cannot reconcile us to God or merit the remission of sins, the favour of God, grace and justification, for this can only follow from faith, believing that we are received into favour through Christ the only

(k) A rosary is a mass with the prayers to the Virgin Mary.

Mediator and atoning sacrifice by whom the Father is reconciled. Consequently whoever trusts in his own works as meritorious, despises the merit and the grace of Christ, and seeks a way to God without Christ, by human strength, although Christ avers, ‘ I am the way, the truth and the life.’ Paul every where teaches this doctrine concerning faith.—Thus, Eph. ii. ‘ By grace ye are saved through faith and that not of yourselves, it is the gift of God, not of works,’ &c. And lest a caviller should arise, saying that we have devised a new interpretation for the language of Paul, we appeal to the testimony of the Fathers. Augustine in many of his writings defends grace and the righteousness of faith in opposition to the merit of works. Ambrose does the same in his call of the Gentiles and elsewhere ; for thus he speaks, ‘ The redemption of Christ would be of little value and the mercy of God must yield to the merit of human performances if justification were due to antecedent merits, so as to be the reward of works and not of free bounty.’

“ Although the ignorant despise this doctrine, pious and trembling consciences derive from it much consolation because works cannot restore peace to the mind, but faith only, by which they become assured of pleasing God through Christ. So speaks Paul, Rom. v. ‘ Being justified by faith we have peace with

God.' The whole of his statement refers to the internal warfare of an alarmed conscience and cannot be understood unless this warfare is experienced. Ignorant and profane persons therefore judge most erroneously upon this subject, who dream that there is no such thing as Christian justification but only a philosophical and civil one.

“ In former times the consciences of men who did not listen to the gospel were much tormented respecting the doctrine of works, some were driven into deserts and monasteries, hoping to merit grace by a monastic like; others devised other works to purchase favour and make satisfaction for sin. The greatest necessity therefore existed to give a clear statement of the doctrine of faith in Christ, that the trembling conscience should not seek consolation in vain and should be instructed how by faith in Christ, favour, pardon and justification were to be obtained.

“ Men are instructed that this term faith does not signify merely historical knowledge such as wicked men and devils possess, but it includes not only a credit of the historical fact but of the effect resulting, namely, the remission of sins, that is, that through Christ we enjoy mercy, justification and forgiveness. Whoever knows that through Christ he has a merciful Father truly knows God, knows that he is under his care, loves him and calls upon his name ; not living without God like the heathen. Devils and wicked men cannot believe in the doctrine of remission, consequently they hate God as an enemy, neither calling upon him nor expecting any good at his hands. Augustine delivers the same doctrine respecting faith, stating that this term is used in Scripture not for such knowledge as the wicked possess, but for that confidence which consoles and inspirits trembling minds.

“ Our churches moreover teach that good works are necessary ; not as meritorious in procuring divine mercy, but such is the will of God, for remission of sins and peace of conscience can only be obtained by faith ; and the Holy Spirit is received by faith, and the heart being renewed new affections are imparted that good works may be produced. Independently of the Holy Spirit, human nature is full of vile affections and totally incapable of doing any thing good in the divine sight, but, under diabolical influence men are impelled to various sins, impious sentiments and open immorality. Thus we see philosophers aiming to live in a moral manner, but they were unable to do so, and fell into open vice. Such is human imbecility when under its own guidance without faith and destitute of the Holy Spirit.

“ Hence it is apparent that our doctrine cannot be accused of prohibiting good works, but is worthy of commendation as shewing in what manner they can be performed. For without faith human nature cannot fulfil the first or second precepts of the law; without faith it cannot call upon God, or expect any thing from him, it cannot bear the cross, but seeks human supports and confides in them. When faith and confidence in God are wanting, vain desires and carnal principles reign in the heart. Hence Christ says, ‘ Without me ye can do nothing,’ John xv. And the church says, ‘ Without thy Spirit there is nothing in man, nothing good.’

ART. XXI.

“ Concerning the worship of saints they teach that their memory may be exhibited, that we may imitate their faith and good works, in the same manner as the Emperor could imitate the example of David in waging war to expel the Turks from the empire, both being kings; but Scripture never instructs us to invoke saints or to implore assistance from them, because it presents Christ to us as the only Mediator, Sacrifice, Priest and Intercessor. To him we are to apply who promises to hear our supplications and who approves our worship, that is, that we resort to his aid in all our afflictions. 1 John ii. ‘ If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father Jesus Christ the righteous.’

“Such is nearly a summary of our doctrine which it may be seen does not disagree with Scripture nor with the universal church, nor with the Romish church so far as may be ascertained from its writers, so that we are injuriously treated by those who denounce us as heretics. But the dissension between us refers to certain abuses which have in an unauthorized manner crept into the churches, in respect to which difference it becomes the bishops to exercise lenity and to tolerate us on account of this our confession, because the canons themselves are not so severe as to require the same rites in all places, nor were the same rites ever exactly the same in all the churches. However for the most part, the ancient rites are observed amongst us. It is therefore calumnious to represent all ceremonies and all the ancient institutions as abolished in our churches. But it has been the public complaint that abuses have adhered to the practice of the usual rites, and these, since pious sincere consciences could not approve them, are in some measure corrected.”

ARTICLES

In which the particular abuses that have been changed are recited.

“Since we do not differ from the Catholic church in articles of faith, but only omit some few abuses which are both novel and are received contrary to the canons through the corruption of the times, we implore your Imperial Majesty to give us a gracious hearing respecting these changes and the reasons for them, that the people may not be compelled against their consciences to observe such abuses. Let not your Imperial Majesty listen to those who stir up hatred and distribute monstrous calumnies against us; by which means the minds of good men being irritated against us, an occasion of disagreement and discord is furnished. For your Imperial Majesty will doubtless perceive that our system both of doctrine and ceremonies is superior to what it is represented by the wicked and malevolent. Besides the truth is not to be collected from the report of the multitude or the railings of adversaries, and it is easy to perceive that nothing conduces so much to preserve the true dignity of worship and the piety of the people, as the proper administration of the public services of the church. (l)

(l) In giving the remaining part of the Confession it has not been deemed requisite to adhere so closely to the words of the writer, but rather to furnish a correct abstract of the statement, because the doctrinal is the most important part and furnishes a view of the sentiments of the Reformers, which Protestants will naturally feel anxious exactly to know; and because it would be tedious and useless to detail all that at the time of the Diet of Augsburg, it was thought necessary to state

THE SACRAMENT IN BOTH KINDS.

“ The Sacrament is administered to the laity in both kinds and not to the ministers only, because it is commanded by Jesus Christ— ‘ Drink ye all of this.’ Whence it is apparent that all were to partake of the cup; and lest there should be any dispute whether this injunction were applicable to the people, Paul testifies in the Epistle to the Corinthians that the whole church commonly received the Supper in both kinds. This was a long continued practice and it is uncertain who first introduced a different custom. Cyprian and Jerome relate that this was the usual practice and the decrees of several popes command it. We do not admit the division of the Sacrament, as such a practice would not comport with the original institution.

THE MARRIAGE OF PRIESTS.

“ Upon occasion of a public complaint that some of the Priests had violated their vow of celibacy, Pope Pius is reported to have said that there were several reasons why the priesthood should be forbid to marry, but many more and weightier why they should return to the practice respecting those abuses of which but one opinion now prevails amongst Protestants.

of it. Our priests wishing to avoid all occasion of scandal, marry and plead its legality, first, from the language of Paul, ‘ Let every one of you have his own wife,’ and ‘ it is better to marry than to burn.’ Secondly, from the words of Christ, ‘ All cannot receive this saying, for some are eunuchs.’

“ It is in vain to fight against the laws of nature and the appointment of God. Paul also expressly requires of a bishop that he be married. In Germany about four hundred years ago priests were compelled to marry, for they were so opposed to it that the Archbishop of Mentz, who was going to publish a decree of the Roman Pontiff on the subject, was borne down by a tumult raised by the incensed priests, so that not only was marriage forbidden in future, but contrary to all divine and human laws, those which had been contracted were dissolved.

“ God himself has pronounced marriage to be honourable and even in every well constituted heathen state it was equally sanctioned by the laws, and yet now the priests are to suffer capital punishments for it! Paul expressly asserts that forbidding to marry is a doctrine of devils.—1 Tim. iv. And be it remembered, that as no human law so no human vow can annul the command of God.

THE MASS.

“ Our churches explode the general opinion of the merit and application of the mass, as false and impious; the state of the controversy may be ascertained from the following abridgment of our arguments.

1. “ The remission of sins as before stated, (Art. iv.) is enjoyed through faith in Christ, consequently it is impossible to obtain this remission through any other means or without the exercise of faith.

2. “ The sufferings of Christ were expiatory; and designed as an oblation not only for original guilt but for all kinds of transgression. ‘ We are sanctified,’ says the apostle, ‘ by the sacrifice of Christ once for all.’—‘ By the one offering of himself he hath for ever perfected them that are sanctified.’ The whole epistle to the Hebrews is occupied in establishing this doctrine, that the sacrifice of Christ is the only and exclusive means of pardon and reconciliation with God.

3. “ In the institution of the Lord’s Supper Christ does not command the priests to offer any sacrifice either for the living or the dead. By what authority therefore is this service appointed as an offering for sin? The mass is absurdly applied to the release of souls from purgatory, whereas it was instituted for the purpose of remembering Christ, and thus confirming the faith and comforting the minds of his people. This misapplication therefore contrary to the authority of Scripture is censurable as a novel and impious service.

4. “ A ceremony without faith is of no avail either to those who perform it or to others, for Christ affirms they are the true worshippers who worship the Father in spirit and in truth ; and the apostle states that by faith Abel offered a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain, and ‘ without faith it is impossible to please God.’

5. “ The proper application of the blessings procured by Jesus Christ is through faith, as Paul testifies in the third chapter of the Romans. ‘ Whom God hath set forth a propitiation through faith in his blood.’ Consequently this application cannot be through or by the merit of any other work.

6. “ The institution of the Sacrament is diametrically opposed to this abuse of it, for while there is no command respecting any offering for the sins of the living or the dead, we are enjoined to partake of the body and blood of Christ and for the express purpose of remembering him. The great design of the institution is to exercise and excite our faith in receiving this pledge of love. Besides, the communion of saints was intended that the ministers of the church might impart the body and blood of Christ to others. That this was the primitive purpose of the institution we learn from Paul, ‘the wine, is it not the communion of the blood of Christ, and the bread is it not the communion of the body of Christ?’

CONFESSION.

“ This practice is not abolished amongst us, but the people are instructed, that a particular enumeration of all their delinquencies is not necessary, for in fact it is impossible. ‘ Who,’ says David, ‘ can understand his errors?’ ‘ The heart of man,’ says Jeremiah, ‘ is deceitful and desperately wicked.’ But if no sins could be remitted unless they were distinctly mentioned, a tender conscience could never be at rest, because the greatest number of our sins are perhaps neither observed nor can they be remembered. The fathers also sanction this omission. We do not therefore burden the conscience, but this we teach, that men must bring forth the fruits of genuine repentance, obedience, the fear of God, faith, holy joy, purity and a universal ‘ newness of mind.’ We retain and enforce contrition, faith, remission and forgiveness of sin, reformation of life and mitigation of present punishments.

THE DISTINCTION OF MEATS AND OTHER TRADITIONS.

“ It has been commonly believed by ecclesiastics as well as the vulgar, that a regard to the distinction of meats and drinks and other human traditions may conduce to the remission of sins. Hence an innumerable multitude of ceremonies, fasts and observances, have been appointed. Many evils have resulted from this idea of traditions: as

1. “ Such an opinion obscures the doctrine of grace and justification by faith, which is an essential part of the gospel and ought to be clearly stated in all the public assemblies of the church. The merit of Christ alone, as the cause of justification, is stated by Paul, but this reliance on human traditions annuls it.

2. “ It operates further to abrogate the divine precepts, because tradition is more consulted than the authority of God and the whole of christianity is represented as consisting in the observance of certain days, rites, fasts and clothing. These observances are dignified by the name of a spiritual and perfect way, but the commands of God to attend to our duties, the education of our children, and to obey our rulers are deemed wordly and imperfect, and far inferior to these other splendid services.

3. “ Tender consciences have been exceedingly disturbed by this doctrine of human traditions, from the conviction that they could not keep them all, though they have been represented as necessary to acceptable worship. Gerson mentions many who have fallen into absolute despair and some who have even committed suicide, because they found it utterly impossible to observe the traditions, and could not be consoled by the doctrine of grace and justification by faith.

“ We teach that none can obtain the forgiveness of sin or merit justification by keeping the traditions of men, consequently they cannot be essential to the proper worship of God. The evidence of this is to be deduced from the Scriptures. Christ excuses the apostles from regarding the customary traditions, ‘ Do not ye understand that whatsoever entereth in at the mouth,’ &c. (Mat. xv. 17—20.) ‘ The kingdom of God is not meat and drink,’ &c. (Rom. xiv. 17.) ‘ Let no man judge you in meat or in drink, or in respect of a holy day,’ &c. (Col. ii. 16.) Again, ‘ if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world are ye subject to ordinances,’ &c. (Col. ii. 20.) ‘ Why,’ says Peter, ‘ tempt ye God to put a yoke on the neck of the disciples which neither our fathers nor we were able to bear?’ (Acts xv. 10.) ‘ The spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils.

commanding to abstain from meats,' &c. (1 Tim. iv. 1—3.)

“To this our adversaries object that we prohibit discipline and the mortification of the flesh, but this is incorrect, for we always teach that Christians ought to bear afflictions; and to be exercised with various afflictions and to be crucified with Christ, is true and not pretended mortification.

“At the same time we do observe some traditions, but the people are admonished against trusting in them for justification before God, or supposing they commit sin by an omission of them.

MONASTIC VOWS.

“Our opinions on this subject will be best understood by considering that such was formerly the state of the monasteries, that every day many things were done in violation of canonical authority. In the time of Augustine, the colleges were free colleges, and after discipline became lax, vows were every where made that it should be restored, and with these vows for the restoration of good order were connected many new observances, which were imposed contrary to the canon upon many at an improper age. Multitudes of both sexes were allured into these establishments and subjected to the severest discipline.

“ To these evils others were added, especially such a persuasion of the efficacy of vows that they were even represented as meriting the remission of sins and justification before God, and a monastic life was not only extolled above every secular duty and every religious office, but made to supersede the precepts of the gospel itself.

“ Formerly there were schools attached to the monasteries for the purpose of communicating instruction in sacred and secular literature; very important they were and serviceable in supplying the church with pastors and bishops. How different the case is now it is needless to state. Instead of being appropriated to learning, now a monastic life is pretended to be a life of perfection, conducive to justification and far preferable to any other vocation, to which even God himself has appointed men by his providence.

“ These are not exaggerated statements for the purpose of rendering the monks odious, but simple facts adduced to illustrate the nature of our doctrines. First, in reference to matrimony; we admit all to marry who are not disposed to celibacy, because vows cannot annul the divine appointment and command.’ ‘ Let every one have his own wife.’ It was declared at the creation of the human race, ‘ it is not good for man to be alone.’ What can be said in reply to this?—let the obligation of a vow be asserted as firmly as you please, it cannot be maintained that it discharges a man from his duty to obey God. The canons expressly teach that in every vow the command of a superior is to be obeyed, how much more then is the authority of God to be regarded! If no reasons can exist for changing the obligation of vows, the Roman Pontiff himself cannot supersede them, for surely it is not lawful for a man to rescind an obligation which is purely divine. But the Popes very wisely judge, that the claims of equity are to be observed in enforcing this obligation, and consequently we often read of their exercising a dispensing power in reference to vows. Many of the canons rescind vows which have been made previous to the age of fifteen and one of them states eighteen, because it is presumed that at so early a period a youth is incapable of forming a proper judgement on a subject which is to influence the whole of his future life: hence a great number are furnished with an excuse to desert the monasteries, because they made their vow previous to the required age. After all, were it conceded that the violation of a vow is reprehensible, it does not follow that marriage ought to be dissolved, which as Augustine observes, is a serious obligation whatever some may after contracting it suppose.

“ We plead also another reason to prove that vows are not obligatory, namely, that all religious services which are merely of human appointment, having no authority from God and represented as essential to forgiveness and justification are impious, because ‘in vain,’ says Christ, ‘do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men?’ and Paul plainly states that remission and justification are obtained by the propitiatory sacrifice of Christ and through faith in his name. The monks teach that these blessings are procurable by those observances which are of human invention, and what is this but detracting from the honour of Christ, obscuring his glory and denying the Scripture doctrine of justification by faith? Vows are therefore both impious and vain; opposed to the gospel and a shameful substitution of a man’s own works for the propitiation of Christ. ‘Whoever of you,’ says Paul, ‘are justified by works are fallen from grace.’

“Moreover the monks represent their mode of life as the state of perfection, because they obey both the precepts of the gospel and the appointments of councils. This is a most awful error; for they boast of the meritorious works of supererogation and conceive they not only obey the precepts themselves, but possess a superabundant righteousness to satisfy for the sins of others.

“When the people are assured that the monkish is the only perfect life, the precepts and the whole service of God are undervalued, because Christian perfection is to live in the habitual fear of God, to confide in his favour through faith in Christ, to seek and to depend on his help in all the various duties which devolve upon us in our respective situations, to be holy in our conduct and to be devoted to our proper callings. Christian perfection consists not in celibacy, nor in mendicity and mean attire.

“ The examples are sufficiently numerous of persons who deserting their families and offices in civil life have withdrawn into monasteries; and this they call flying from the world and pursuing a kind of life more acceptable to God; but surely to keep his commandments and not the traditions of men, is alone deserving the name of a good and perfect kind of life.

ECCLESIASTICAL POWER.

“ This subject has proved a fertile source of the most violent contentions, while the ecclesiastical and civil power have been united in the same ruler. The Roman Pontiffs relying on their influence and authority, have not only oppressed the consciences of men with violent excommunications and appointed new modes of worship, but have even aimed to seize and appropriate imperial sceptres and gain the dominion of the world. This conduct has been long and often condemned by learned and pious men in our churches, and we have endeavoured to console afflicted consciences by pointing out the distinction between the power of the church and the power of the sword, and shewing how each ought to be revered as appointed by God for the welfare of mankind.

“ The power of bishops we apprehend to be a power or authority from God to preach the gospel, to remit and retain sins, and to administer the ordinances. The commission of Christ to his disciples is thus expressed, ‘ As the Father hath sent me even so send I you.—Receive the Holy Ghost—whosoever sins ye remit they shall be remitted, and whosoever sins ye retain they shall be retained.’—‘ Go and preach my gospel to every creature,’ &c.

“ This power is to be exercised only in teaching and preaching the gospel, and in administering the ordinances or services of their proper calling, because they are not entrusted with the temporal but spiritual concerns of men and whatever relates to an eternal life. These things belong to the ministry, and the gospel is ‘ the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.’ Ecclesiastical power therefore is to be exercised in the preaching of the gospel and in reference to eternal things, but not to impede or controul the political administration of empires. Nor is it the business of the magistrate to legislate for the conscience, but for the temporal interests of men to protect them from injuries, to coerce them by the sword, to inflict corporal punishments, to administer civil justice and to maintain social order and peace. The ecclesiastical must not therefore be confounded with the civil power. The former is to teach and to administer the ordinances but ought not to interfere with another office, to aim at secular dominion, to abrogate the law of the civil magistrate, to prevent due subordination, or to obstruct the course of ordinary justice. ‘My kingdom,’ exclaimed the Saviour, ‘is not of this world.’ Again, ‘who constituted me a judge or a divider amongst you?’ And the apostle intimates, that ‘the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds and casting down every imagination that exalteth itself against the the knowledge of God.’

“ If bishops possess the power of the sword, it is given them not by the authority of Scripture, but by the command of kings and princes.

“ Considerable disputes have been agitated, whether bishops or pastors possess an authority to institute ceremonies in the church and to prescribe feasts, fasts and other observances. They who assign this right to bishops, allege this sentence, 'I have many things to say to you but ye cannot bear it now, but when he the Spirit of truth shall come he will lead you into all truth:' and they plead the example of apostolic injunctions which prohibited the use of blood and things strangled—which changed the day of the Sabbath contrary as it appears to the original appointment of the law. But we reply, that the bishops have no authority to introduce another gospel. Besides, to establish traditions is contrary to the Scripture, and the glory of Christ is tarnished when we expect by such observances to merit remission of sins and justification before God. This vain hope has occasioned an almost infinite number of traditions to creep into the church.

“ If the bishops are endowed with authority to load the churches with endless traditions and thus to ensnare tender consciences, why does Scripture so frequently prohibit the multiplication of traditionary services? Why does it denominate them doctrines of devils?

“ It may be inquired, what then is to become of our dominical days, and similar institutions? The reply is, that bishops or pastors may make appointments for the ordinary regulation of the churches, but not represent these services as necessary to the remission of sins, or in any degree so obligatory on the consciences of men as that they are to imagine themselves guilty of any crime in omitting them. Such appointments conduce to the preservation of love and peace, that all things may be done decently and in order, but are not to be oppressive to the conscience or represented as essential to salvation.

“ Such are the principal articles of our faith. We have omitted to notice many other abuses and subjects of violent contention in order to avoid prolixity. We are firmly persuaded that these our sentiments are conformable to the prophetic and apostolic writings, and the general opinion of the true universal church of Christ. We are ready to furnish any additional information or explanation whenever it shall be deemed necessary ; in the mean time we beseech the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ that he would preserve, purify and increase his own church which is redeemed by the blood of his Son.

“ Your Imperial Majesty’s, “ Faithful and submissive Servants:

“ JOHN, DUKE ELECTOR OF SAXONY.

GEORGE, MARQUIS OF BRANDENBURG.

ERNEST, DUKE OF LUNENBURG.

PHILIP, LANDGRAVE OF HESSE.

JOHN FREDERIC, DUKE OF SAXONY.

FRANCIS, DUKE OF LUNENBURG.

WOLFGANG, PRINCE OF ANHALT.

SENATE AND MAGISTRATES OF NUREMBERG.

SENATE OF REUTLINGEN.”

The preceding confession was read in the German language by Christian Beyer, Chancellor of Saxony. A copy was also presented at the same time in Latin, by Pontanus. Cœlestine relates that when he gave it to one of the Emperor's secretaries, he had the boldness to exclaim, "by the grace and through the help of God, this confession will prevail against the gates of hell." This however was more probably said at some other less public moment. (m)

It is reported of William, Duke of Bavaria, who vehemently opposed the doctrine of the gospel, that as soon as the confession was read, he asked Eckius whether they might overthrow this doctrine out of the Holy Scriptures; "No," replied Eckius, "by the Holy Scripture we cannot overthrow it, but we may by the fathers." Upon which Cardinal Albert, Archbishop of Mentz, said to the Duke of Bavaria, "Behold how finely our divines support us! The Protestants prove what they say out of the Holy Scriptures, but we have our doctrine without Scripture." (n)

The Emperor immediately dismissed the assembly, and entered into a serious consultation with the Popish fraternity respecting the proper line of conduct to be adopted. Some were for enforcing the edict of Worms and compelling the consciences of their opponents to submit to imperial and ecclesiastical authority, others were desirous of selecting a certain number of learned men to consult and advise the Emperor. But the prevailing opinion, which Melancthon had anticipated,^(o) was to procure a confutation of the Protestant articles from the Popish divines, which should be read in a full Diet. Faber, Eckius, Conrad de Wimpina, Conrad Collinus, John Cochlæus and other select associates undertook and speedily completed the work. It was reviewed by the Emperor and the Catholic princes, who advised the omission of all expressions calculated to promote irritation. On the third of August the Diet was convened to hear it; and on the sixth Melancthon thus expresses his opinion in a letter to Luther. “At length we have heard the confutation and at the same time the Emperor’s sentiments which were sufficiently bitter. Before this document was read, he declared that he was resolved to abide by the opinions he had caused to be there stated, and desired that our princes would adopt the same; but if they refused, he as the defender of the church would no longer tolerate the German schism. This was the sum of his oration, which, infamous as it was, the Catholics welcomed with prodigious applause. The same may be said of their puerile confutation, for absolutely it is more foolish than any thing which even Faber has published.”(p) In another letter to Luther two days afterwards, he intimates “that their adversaries had used threatening language to terrify the princes from their adherence to the doctrines of the Reformation;” and it appears that they had distinctly assured the Elector John, that “unless he would abjure the Lutheran doctrines which he had embraced, the Emperor would raise an armed force to oblige him and that he should be deprived of his dignities, his possessions and even his life, with all who professed the same faith, their wives and children.” It was some time before the Elector could recover from the agitation which such a violent philippic had produced, but the effect was only temporary.(q)

(m) SECKENDORF.

(n) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 152.

(o) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 12. ad Luth.

“God’s word,” says Luther, “is powerful; the more it is persecuted the more and further it spreadeth itself abroad. Behold the Imperial Diet at Augsburg, which doubtless is the last Trumpet before the dreadful day of Judgment—how raged the world there against the word.”(r)

Though many articles of the confession were approved; others, especially the fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, twentieth and twenty-first were totally rejected. The second respecting original sin they admitted, excepting the definition which appeared to them more descriptive of actual than original sin; the eleventh was only objected to in reference to what was said of confession; and the several anti-catholic intimations in the twelfth and fifteenth were of course the subjects of animadversion. They affirm in contradiction to the second part of the Augsburg Confession, that Communion in one kind, the Celibacy of Priests, the Mass, Monastic Vows and the other subjects of objection introduced by the Protestants are not abuses, but religious and holy usages commanded by Scripture and confirmed by tradition. At the same time they admit that some degree of Reformation in the practice of them was requisite, to which the Emperor would pay due attention. They finished by expressing a hope that the Protestants would return to the communion of the Church.

(p) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. ep. 12.

(q) CŒLESTIN. Hist. Tom. III. 26.

(r) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 347.

To the concluding intimation, the Elector of Saxony who spoke in the name of the Protestants replied, that they were ready to do any thing which conscience would allow for the sake of promoting union in religion, that if the Catholics could prove from Scripture that they had advanced any error it should be recanted, that they were ready to furnish any explanation that might be demanded, and that they wished to have a copy of the refutation of their articles. This request the Emperor refused, but two days afterwards offered it upon condition of its not being published. This was not agreed to, but seventeen persons were nominated by the Catholics to discuss religious differences, whose conferences were however of no avail. The Elector of Brandenburg pressed the necessity of satisfying the Emperor, by uniting in matters of faith with the princes and members of the empire, otherwise they might incur the reproach of involving Germany in war and tumult. After due deliberation, they communicated their answer by their deputy George Brucke to this purpose, "that they took it ill to be threatened, that the Emperor would not give them a sufficient hearing, and that they were not allowed but upon a severe condition, a copy of the refutation of their articles. It was expected they should assent to it without examination, which their consciences disallowed, and notwithstanding the promises of a general council in the last Diet at Spires, it had not been convened." To this the Roman deputies replied in a defensive and explanatory paper, and finally it was agreed at the suggestion of the Protestants, that a smaller number should be appointed for the determination of the present controversy. Two princes, two lawyers, and three divines were selected on each side conformably with this resolution,

The Catholics were, the Bishop of Augsburg, Henry, Duke of Brunswick, the Chancellor of the Archbishop of Cologne, and the Chancellor of the Marquis of Baden, John Eckius, Conrad Wimpina and John Cochlæus : the Protestants were, John Frederic, son of the Elector of Saxony, George, Marquis of Brandenburg ; the lawyers, Gregory Pontanus and Heller ; and the divines, Melancthon, Brentius and Schnepfius.

After conferring together they managed a mode of expression, in which fifteen articles of the Augsburg Confession were mutually subscribed and only six remained ; of these three were only in part disputed and the rest remitted to the second division of the confession, upon which they still continued and were likely to remain disunited.

The state of the question being reported to the Diet, it was resolved that a smaller committee consisting of three on each side, two lawyers and one divine would be more available. Melancthon was nominated for the Protestants, and Eckius for the Catholics. The principal points of debate were the Mass, Vows and the Celibacy of Priests. The Catholics agreed that the Priests who were married might live with their wives, but they would make no concessions respecting the Mass and Vows.

The Emperor was extremely anxious to reconcile contending parties, and endeavoured to win over the Protestant princes by the most attentive behaviour and the most alluring promises. In particular he urged the Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Hesse; but to their immortal honour be it recorded, they were neither to be allured nor alarmed into a dereliction of the noble but too often persecuted cause of Christian liberty. (s)

All hopes of an accommodation being now at an end, the worst was anticipated. "We expect," says Melancthon, "violent measures, for no moderation can satisfy the Popish faction. They, in fact, seek our destruction. Pray that God may preserve us." (t)

"AN APOLOGY for the Augsburg Confession," drawn up by Melancthon, was on the twenty-second of September presented by the Protestant princes to the Emperor, who declined receiving it. Though not published till the following year, the insertion of a few short extracts in this place seems appropriate and will be acceptable. (u)

(s) SLEID. 132. SCULTET. Annal. 158.

(t) Ep. 12. ad Hess.

(u) The Augsburg Confession, the Apology above referred to, the Great and Little Catechism of Luther, to which some churches add the Form of Concord published in 1579, compose what are called in Germany the SYMBOLIC BOOKS OF THE LUTHERANS; and are considered by them as the works of standard authority and appeal.

“ To represent justification as by faith only has been considered objectionable, though Paul concludes that a ‘ man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law ;’ (x) that we are ‘ justified freely by his grace,’ (y) and that ‘ it is the gift of God not of works lest any man should boast.’ (z) If the use of the exclusive term only be deemed inadmissible, let them expunge from the writings of the apostle the exclusive phrases by grace, not of works, the gift of God and others of similar import. We exclude all notions of human merit, but not as our adversaries calumniously insinuate the use of Sacraments and means. It has been already stated that faith cometh by hearing, and we most highly estimate the ministry of the word. Love and obedience must be connected with faith, so that they are only excluded as the meritorious source of justification.

“ We state that love is essentially connected with faith, for according to Paul, ‘ In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth any thing, nor uncircumcision, but faith which worketh by love.’ But we do not admit that the remission of sins and reconciliation with God, are obtained for the sake of love as a meritorious act, or for any other kind of work, but by faith only or faith properly so called, because the promise of forgiveness respects the exercise of faith. It is faith which assents to the promise and is every where referred to in Scripture.

(x) Rom. iii. 28.

(y) Rom. iii. 24.

(z) Eph. ii. 8, 9.

“ In our churches the members are instructed into the true purpose of the Sacrament as a sign and testimony of the free forgiveness of sin, a doctrine highly consolatory to trembling spirits and in which they ought to be admonished to place their confidence. The preaching of the gospel and the legitimate use of the Sacraments constitute with us a perpetual sacrifice, and the resort to our services is far more numerous than to those of our adversaries, because they are more useful and intelligible. But their doctrines neither the learned nor the ignorant can comprehend. Truth, holy doctrine, the proper use of the Sacraments, affectionate discourses, constitute the proper ornaments of churches, but wax tapers, golden vases and other things of a similar nature though ornamental in themselves do not constitute the glory of the Christian church : and if our adversaries mistake these for worship, instead of the preaching of the gospel and the exercises of faith, they must be numbered amongst those whom Daniel describes, as ‘honouring their own God with gold and silver, and with precious stones and pleasant things.’ (a)

(a) Dan. xi. 38.

“ We are not fond of invidious comparisons, but as our adversaries are perpetually urging them we cannot omit mentioning some of their evil practices. What mischief is done by the profanation of the Mass! What evils result from their law of celibacy! What a manifest piece of idolatry is the worship of saints! Then will it be affirmed there is nothing reprehensible in the ambition of their Pontiffs, who for upwards of four hundred years have waged an incessant war with our Emperors in Italy, and sometimes even in Germany itself, arming sons and fathers, relatives and citizens against each other? And if the records of history be searched to ascertain the true causes of such hostilities, I use the most moderate terms when I say, no cause, worthy of the station and character of these dignitaries can be found. What mischief ensues from the delegation of unfit persons to the sacerdotal office and from trafficking in benefices! And is there no fault in the dangerous disputes that are prevalent, which indeed might be pardoned if the purity of doctrine were preserved in the churches? But, what impious opinions and traditions are introduced and practised, let the writings of canonists and divines testify, which abound in discussions, some useless and some opposed to the gospel of Christ. Then, in interpreting Scripture they trifle and take the most unwarrantable liberties.”

On the subject of ecclesiastical jurisdiction and the power of bishops, Melancthon had conceded in his conferences with the Papist committee more than many of his own party thoroughly approved, and yet Luther himself in his admonition to the princes of the empire, allowed that the bishops might retain their authority both civil and ecclesiastical, if they would employ it to the glory of God and not support the Pope's supremacy. The fact was, that Melancthon entertained hope of an essential reformation in the spirit and conduct of the bishops, while Luther despaired of the possibility of effecting it, and was therefore extremely cautious of any concession to their authority. (b) In all doctrinal points Melancthon proved himself a firm, enlightened, inflexible Protestant. The testimony of a good conscience supported him amidst the perpetual calumnies which his zealous, disinterested and pious labours incurred; and if, as many suspected, the Catholics selected him and Eckius, finally to adjust the points of difference from an expectation that his characteristic gentleness and dislike of contention would induce him to sacrifice truth to peace, they were completely disappointed. It is agreed he went as far as possible, and further probably than his stern friend

(b) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. II. p. 159.

Luther could have been induced to do ; but it would be difficult to prove that impetuosity and violence are conducive to conviction, or in any respect auxiliary to truth. Inflexibility is not the more estimable for assuming a military dress or a menacing air.

A celebrated ecclesiastical historian(c) has judiciously remarked, "it was in these conferences (at Augsburg) that the spirit and character of Melancthon appeared in their true and genuine colours ; and it was here that the votaries of Rome exhausted their efforts to gain over to their party this pillar of the Reformation, whose abilities and virtues added such a lustre to the protestant cause. This humane and gentle spirit was apt to sink into a kind of yielding softness, under the influence of mild and generous treatment. And accordingly while his adversaries soothed him with fair words and flattering promises, he seemed to melt as they spoke, and in some measure to comply with their demands ; but when they so far forgot themselves as to make use of imperious language and menacing terms, then did Melancthon appear in a very different point of light ; then a spirit of intrepidity, ardour and independance animated all his words and actions, and he looked down with contempt on the threats of power, the frowns of fortune and the fear of death. The truth is, that in this great and good man, a soft and yielding temper was joined with the most inviolable fidelity and the most invincible attachment to the truth."

(c) MOSH. Eccles. Hist. Vol. IV. p. 96.

In the midst of these multifarious transactions a correspondence was maintained between Melancthon and many persons of distinguished character. Scarcely a day passed in which there was not some kind of communication with Luther, who suggested various consolatory sentiments to his friend and frequently rallied him with some severity respecting his apprehensive state of mind. The following illustrative anecdote, however, ought by no means to be omitted, because it evinces, notwithstanding the imputations of historians, the sterling integrity of his principle amidst his constitutional infirmities. After the Protestant confession had been presented to the council, Cardinal Campegius and his party inquired of Melancthon if he still persisted in his opinion. Upon which he replied, that "neither he nor his associates could abandon the known truth, and he besought him not to denounce their sentiments, but to allow them to avow what they never could deny with a good conscience." Campegius answered, "I cannot allow it, for the successor of Peter is infallible." "Well then," rejoined Melancthon, "we commend ourselves and our concerns to God. If HE be for us who can be against us?—We shall await with patience whatever may happen to us. In our provinces we have upwards of forty thousand persons including poor ministers, their families and parishioners, whose spiritual interest we cannot abandon, but will do whatever we are able for them, praying for the help of Jesus Christ whose cause we espouse; and in our calling we are prepared to labour with patience, and endure all difficulties. If it be necessary we would, if such be the will of God, rather fight and die than betray so many souls.”(d)

The decree of the Diet was at length published on the nineteenth of November. It assumed a tone of high authority, asserting the Catholic doctrines and condemning the tenets of Protestantism. The people were exhorted to hear mass, to pray to the Virgin and to saints, to observe holy days; images and statues were ordered to be replaced where they had been removed, and all alterations or innovations in religion were strictly prohibited. This decree was to be put in execution whatever opposition or appeals might be made against it, and all who refused to obey it subjected themselves to be put under the ban of the empire, and were declared incapable of being admitted to the

(d) VAN DE CORPUT Leven ende Dood van Phil. Mel. p. 179.

Imperial Chamber. The princes, states and cities which had rejected the Papal authority, were required under pain of exemplary punishment to return to their allegiance to Rome. The only consolatory circumstance amidst this imperial thunder, was a faint whisper that an application should be made to the Pope respecting the appointment of a general council within six months to decide religious controversies.(e)

The Protestants in general and the anxious mind of Melancthon in particular could not but feel deeply affected with this termination of the conferences at Augsburg. The disposition of their adversaries was sufficiently obvious, for in addition to this persecuting decree the Emperor had pledged himself to unite with the confederated forces of the Popish princes, to compel the execution of it and maintain the established religion.(f)

The Protestant princes retired from the Diet with the strongest feelings of dissatisfaction and disappointment. Instead of despairing however, they re-assembled at Smalcald, and the result of this conference was, the adoption of defensive measures for the preservation of their religious liberties.(g)

Soon after these transactions Melancthon with Luther and other divines, met together for the purpose of consulting about the proper measures to be adopted in the present exigency, and after having spent some time in prayer to God from whom alone they could expect adequate assistance, Melancthon was suddenly called out of the room, from which he retired under great depression of spirits. He saw during his absence some of the elders of the reformed churches with their parishioners and families. Several children were also brought hanging at the breast, while others a little older were engaged in prayer. This reminded him of the prophetic language, “out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength, because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger.”^(h) Animated by this interesting scene he returned to his friends with a disencumbered mind and a cheerful countenance. Luther astonished at this sudden change said, “What now! what has happened to you, Philip, that you are become so cheerful?” “O sirs,” replied Melancthon, “let us not be discouraged, for I have seen our noble protectors, and such as I will venture to say will prove invincible against every foe!”—“And pray,” returned Luther, thrilling with surprize and pleasure, “Who and where are these powerful heroes?”—“Oh!” said Melancthon, “they are the wives of our parishioners and their little children, whose prayers I have just witnessed—prayers which I am satisfied our God will hear: for as our heavenly Father and the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has never despised nor rejected our supplications, we have reason to trust that he will not in the present alarming crisis.”(i)

(e) SLEID. Hist. 139. (f) SLEID. 140. (g) SLEID. Hist. 142.

(h) Ps. viii. 2.

It is said that during the Imperial Diet at Augsburg, Albert, Archbishop of Mentz, had by some means obtained a bible and read it attentively for four hours, when one of his council suddenly entering his chamber, asked with much astonishment what his Highness was doing with that book? To which he replied, “I know not what this book is, but sure I am, all that is written therein is quite against us.”(k)

(i) VAN DE CORPUT Leven ende Dood van Phil. Mel. p. 224, 225.

(k) COLLOQ. MENSAL. p. 11.

CHAP. IX.

A. D. 1531, TO A. D. 1536.

Smalcald—Unfavourable circumstances announced—The Emperor retracts at Ratisbon and agrees to the suspension of all legal processes against the Protestants—Death of the Elector JOHN—Melancthon's Funeral Oration—His Epitaph—Succeeded by John Frederic—The Emperor urges on the Pope a general Council—Continuance of the Sacramental Controversy—Melancthon and Bucer confer with the Landgrave—A vain attempt at Leipsic to restore union between contending parties—FRANCIS I. URGES MELANCTHON TO REPAIR TO FRANCE—Their Correspondence—Entreaties of the Langœan family to the same purpose—Bellay goes into Germany and invites Melancthon into France—The Elector interposes to prevent the Journey—HENRY VIII. INVITES MELANCTHON INTO ENGLAND—Their Correspondence—The King of England's eagerness in dispatching Messengers to France to prevent Melancthon's continuance there if he were arrived, or otherwise to dissuade him from going—Curious original documents on the Subject—A larger Commission sent into Germany—Melancthon's Communication with Archbishop Cranmer—State of his health—Takes a Journey—Injurious reports circulated—Writes against the Anabaptists—Conferences with Bucer and Capito.

Two unfavourable events were announced to the Protestant princes, when they were assembled a second time in the early part of the year 1531, at Smalcald; the one the Election of Ferdinand to be king of the Romans, which was considered as an artful proceeding of his brother the Emperor for the purpose of rendering the imperial crown hereditary in his family, and consequently subversive of the liberties of the empire—the other the commencement of prosecutions against some of their number on account of their religious principles. It was deemed immediately necessary to renew their defensive league, and by means of their ambassadors to implore the protection and support of the Kings of England, France and Denmark.

Providence again interposed to rescue the oppressed. It was not long before the Emperor perceived that it was essential to his political interests, rather to retrace his hasty steps than by pressing on in his persecuting career to involve Germany in a civil war. He found that his peace with France and his friendship with the Pope were both precarious, and that the Turkish army was advancing upon Austria with recruited forces. The malcontent princes were therefore to be conciliated and not coerced, and it was stipulated at Nuremberg and finally agreed upon at the Diet of Ratisbon in August 1532, that upon condition of their rendering the requisite assistance in the war with the Turks, The Emperor would suspend all legal processes against the Protestants on account of religion, use his utmost endeavours to procure the appointment of a general council within six months, to meet within twelve; and that no person should, at present, be molested for his religion.

At this juncture the Elector JOHN was removed from his useful labours, and exalted station by an apoplexy. The event occurred on the sixteenth of August 1532, and though Melancthon and Luther were immediately sent for, they only arrived in time to see him expire. (l) The former delivered a Latin oration at his funeral, in which he thus admirably pourtrays the character of his prince.

“ I shall not speak of his noble birth, for which indeed the Dukes of Saxony are sufficiently distinguished, nor of his youthful pursuits, though he might be highly eulogized for modesty and temperance; but confine myself principally to the delineation of his character during the period of his public life since the decease of his illustrious brother Frederic. Amidst a thousand difficulties, the genuine piety of the Elector John, his firmness, moderation, peaceful intentions and every other virtue which can constitute a good prince, were conspicuous. It is a glorious trophy characteristic of his reign, and demanding our gratitude, that in a most turbulent period, these realms by the interposing mercy of Providence have been preserved in tranquillity, though many endeavoured to stir up war. The preservation of peace was doubtless also a duty incumbent upon a prince so favoured of heaven, and his authority, moderation and zeal eminently conduced to it, by frequently and forcibly disappointing the designs of ambitious men. It is easy to judge of the extent of the benefit derived from these exertions, when it is recollected that the cause in which he was engaged did not respect a single province or state only, but the whole of Germany. If war had been once kindled it would have raged throughout the empire, so that by preserving domestic peace he was instrumental in securing the tranquillity of many other states. Nor were his enemies alone restrained by his authority and moderate counsels, but his violent confederates were checked by perpetual efforts on his part, which it would not be improper on this occasion to particularize. We have seen them taking up arms and in a situation to command victory, yet induced by the prince's justice, though contrary to their inclinations, to adjust their respective claims without bloodshed, in which he displayed an extraordinary heroism. When he could have gained the most decisive advantages over his most inveterate enemies who were at the very moment plotting his ruin, he spared them. How often has he shewn a mind impregnable to sentiments of private cupidity, for after composing strife he never cherished the spirit of revenge, but was satisfied with maintaining public quiet. This, this is truly worthy of a great and wise man, to conquer anger and to prefer the welfare of his country to the gratification of his private feelings. It must indeed be acknowledged that war is sometimes necessary, the enemy must be opposed and states must be roused to hostile preparations; but it is no less so that the turbulent emotions of the mind should be repressed and restored to reason, and that contention should be prevented by mild and judicious counsels.

(l) SPALAT. Hist. MS. ap. Seck.

“What, shall I say of his domestic administration, which was replete with clemency and humanity? Homer represents Ulysses as ruling the Ithacans like a good father, and Xenophon, who proposes Cyrus as a perfect pattern for a prince, says that a good prince resembles a good father: and who ever had it in his power to say any thing worse of our departed prince who was incapable of acting with cruelty or pride? To me he appeared to cherish the most paternal feelings for all his subjects, and I have often noticed the most striking indications of it both in private discourse and in public transactions.

“ His private life was most unostentatious, free from all disgraceful excess and dissipation, and all the leisure hours he could command at intervals of business were devoted to sacred literature and especially to the study of the Christian religion. To this he gave his principal attention in the latter period of his life, and as I know from indubitable authority he abounded in the exercises of devotion. No one is ignorant of the dangers he incurred through his attachment to evangelical truth; and God eminently honoured his exalted virtue, by protecting him through so many years, and liberating him from so many dangers, as he did Hezekiah when blockaded by the Assyrian army in Jerusalem. Now in a period of public tranquillity he is taken away, (but happily not unprepared for the change,) from miseries which may yet await us and from the agonies of a painful disorder. We may be permitted to grieve for the loss of a prince endowed with such various excellencies, so studious of general peace, and so devotedly kind to his people that he may be denominated their Father as well as their Prince.

“ In what dangers and misfortunes the state may hereafter be involved I will not pretend to predict, but most humbly implore the supreme Jehovah, while our departed Elector rests in peace, to look upon the family of his subjects, to bestow his mercies on his son and successor, that he may prove our protector amidst impending dangers, and give peace to the state for the advancement of his truth and the glory of Jesus Christ. We acknowledge that God is the only sufficient preserver of the state—to him we fly, from him we implore assistance who has promised to hear the supplications of the afflicted.

“ Let me exhort all present earnestly to unite in this prayer to God, to bless the prince under whose protection we are now placed that he may preserve the peace of the church, maintain the doctrines of the gospel and promote every description of useful learning.”

Some tributary lines by Melancthon further honour the memory of a name, brighter and more durable than the brass on which it is recorded.

Tu quoque, Saxonice, Joannes, inclyte Princeps

Non virtute minor cognite fratre tuo ;

Eximiâ Christum pietate fideque colebas

Vita piæ mentis testis eratque tuæ.

Vindelicis coram tua Cæsare nuper in oris

Asseruit Christi lingua professa fidem.

Notior ut fieret divini gloria verbi
 Temporibus fulsit quæ rediviva tuis.
 Utque Evangelii studium deponere velles Flectere non ullæ te potuere minæ.
 Ista tui incendit constantia pectoris hostes
 Attulit et passim multa pericla tibi
 Sed te difficili protexit tempore Christus Et gratam pacem pro pietate dedit.
 Ac tua sæpe tamen moderatio profuit ingens
 Impia ne quisquam sumeret arma manu ;
 Hâc longè superas aliorum laude triumphos
 Hæc virtus magno Principe digna fuit.
 Ergo tuum a nullo nomen delebitur ævo
 Nec meriti laus est interitura tui.
 Hic tua dum Christus meliori corpora sorte Restituet justis, molliter ossa cubent.
 Spiritus at vivat, cælique fruatur honore
 Interea Christi conditus in gremio.

Virtuous as FREDERIC, thou, illustrious JOHN !
 Our weeping hearts reluctantly resign'd ;
 Whose faith and love to Christ conspicuous shone,
 Whose every action mark'd a pious mind.

Thou didst the faith of Christ with zeal maintain Nor dread imperial dictates and decrees ;
 Through all our coasts the truth of heaven proclaim,
 Whose glory brightens even times like these.

No threats could move thee and no fears alarm,
 Though foes and dangers closely round thee press'd ;
 Christ for thy zeal protected thee from harm,
 And with tranquillity thy country bless'd.

Thy moderation check'd enkindling strife,
 A triumph—and the noblest man can gain!
 A praise, surpassing far the hero's life,
 And worthy such a prince, so born to reign!

In Time's vast record a distinguish'd page,
 Thou shalt, illustrious JOHN! for ever grace;
 Thy name shall live through every future age,
 Nor change nor death th' eternal lines erase.

Here in soft slumbers shall thy ashes lie,
 Till Christ returns his matchless power to prove;
 While thy immortal spirit mounts the sky
 T' enjoy the heaven of her Redeemer's love.

It may be regarded as a favourable circumstance in the history of the Reformation that the venerable Elector now deceased was succeeded by his son JOHN FREDERIC, who was zealously attached to the Protestant cause, and exerted all the energy of his mind and the vigour of his youth to promote it.

After the retreat of the Turkish army, to which it had been compelled by the menacing appearance of the Imperial forces, Charles hastened to Italy, for the purpose of procuring a personal interview with the Pope to press the appointment of a general Council. The latter, urged by an importunity which he could not resist, adopted the plausible measure of deputing his Nuncio, Hugo Rangonus Bishop of Reggio, to accompany the Emperor's Ambassador to the new Elector of Saxony, as head of the Protestants, to confer on the subject of a Council which he proposed should be convened at Mantua, Bologna or Placentia. The Elector immediately summoned his principal divines. Melancthon delivered it as his decided conviction “that the Roman Pontiff was practising a piece of dissimulation to cajole them into conditions to which they must not submit—that he made extraordinary concessions to induce them to agree to the decisions of a general convention of his own arrangement, to which for his part he could not agree because it ought to be a free assembly in which opinions on both sides might be discussed fairly and without restraint—that a deceptive purpose was obvious, and it would be preposterous to consent to a Council before they knew what forms of proceeding were to be adopted, or who were to be implicated in its decrees—that the Emperor could not, and the Pope would not actually convene it.” In this they all concurred, intimating to the Nuncio, that as the controversy had arisen and was principally conducted in Germany, there the Council ought to be assembled. Nothing was effected by this negotiation, excepting the Roman Pontiff’s purpose of creating delay. (m)

Although Zuinglius and Œcolampadius were

(m) PAUL Hist. 61. SECK. Hist. Luth. Lib. 3. CAM. Vit. Mel.

now dead, the Sacramental controversy did not expire: unquestionably the conciliating spirit of Melancthon, so happily attempering his conscientious integrity, would have reconciled contending parties, had not Luther persisted in the most unwarrantable violence, which is the more to be deplored as he was obviously mistaken. In the latter end of the year 1534, Melancthon was commissioned to go and confer upon the subject with Bucer at Cassel, in the presence of the Landgrave. Bucer, who acted in the name of the Ministers of Upper Germany, and who exerted himself with indefatigable zeal to effect an union between the Lutherans and Zuinglians, proposed as the basis of an agreement, that “we received truly and substantially the body and blood of Jesus Christ when we receive the Sacrament—that the bread and wine are exhibiting signs, and by receiving them the body and blood of Jesus Christ are given to us and received by us—that the bread and body of Jesus Christ are united, not by a mixture of substance, but as being given with the Sacrament.” On the report of this statement to Luther, his hostility was somewhat abated though not eradicated, which was the only ascertainable advantage that resulted from the interview.

An attempt was made during the same year by Ferdinand, Duke George and the Elector of Saxony to allay religious animosities, and to promote concord. The meeting of persons appointed on each side to confer took place at Leipsic. Vehus, and Christopher Turcus, his Chancellor, were the deputies of Ferdinand; Julius Phlug and George Carlovitch appeared on the part of Duke George; the disinterested piety, indefatigable perseverance and excellent spirit of Melancthon naturally induced the Elector to associate him with Pontanus in this new labour. An account of the conference is still extant in the German language. It is written by Melancthon, and distinguished by the total absence of all asperity, and the clear undisguised statement of every transaction. It appears that the attempt to unite was in vain—the papists adhered to their opinions, and the Saxon deputies would not relinquish truth. Vehus presented a form of concord, but it distinctly mentioned the errors which were most objectionable to the Protestants, especially the doctrine of the meritorious power of the Mass to obtain the remission of sins.⁽ⁿ⁾ Nothing is more illustrative of the true character of Melancthon than these transactions. He was willing to approximate as far as possible, by conceding every point of difference which did not regard what he deemed essential truth; but then he became inflexible. Possessed of the most benignant temper, he was formed to pacify the world, and inherited the blessedness of the peace-maker.^(o) Presenting to our view a rare combination of excellencies, a singular and pleasing union of the Christian and the Hero, we behold him firm but not violent, modest but not servile, conscientious but not punctilious.

(n) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. III. p. 90.

Wherever Lutheranism was known, or literature admired, the name of Philip Melancthon was familiar. Francis I. earnestly entreated him to repair to France. Maimbourg relates, that Margaret Queen of Navarre and sister to the king united with other illustrious females attached to the court, who cherished sentiments favourable to the Reformation, in requesting that he might be sent for to be consulted on the existing religious contentions. The Queen frequently spoke of him to her brother as a man of exalted piety, profound learning and singular eloquence. Francis, whose active zeal for the revival of literature in France, had acquired him the title of the Father of Letters, listened with pleasure to these representations and immediately adopted measures to procure a visit. Voræus Fossa was dispatched with a letter from the king, and a command to urge him in his name to repair to his court. The letter is preserved.

(o) MATTH. v. 9.

“ FRANCIS, by the grace of God King of France, to our Beloved Philip Melancthon, greeting :

“ By means of William Bellaius Langey, our Chamberlain and Counsellor to whom the management of Ecclesiastical affairs is principally confided, I have for some time known it to be your peculiar study to appease the present disputes in religion ; and now I find both from your letters to him, and from the report of Barnabas Voræus Fossa, who is just returned, that this is a very gratifying labour to you. I wish you to come the very first opportunity, and fully confer with some of our most eminent Doctors on the reconciliation of opinions, and on other things susceptible of improvement in the government of the church, for which I feel the greatest solicitude and anxiety. However I will send Voræus Fossa to you immediately with these letters for a safe conduct, imploring you not to be dissuaded by any one from this pious and holy undertaking. Your visit will be most grateful to me, and you are at perfect liberty to come either in a private or public character, and be assured you will find me, as indeed I always have been, most desirous of promoting your glory, reputation and comfort both at home and abroad.

“ From the town of GUISE, the twenty-eighth day of June, one thousand five hundred and thirty-five.”

MELANCTHON'S REPLY.

“ Most Christian and most Potent King!

“ ALTHOUGH the far-famed kingdom of France greatly surpasses every other in the known world in many other honourable distinctions, this may be noticed with peculiar approbation that it has always excelled the rest of the nations in purity of doctrine and perpetual zeal in defence of the Christian religion. It has therefore deservedly obtained the appellation of most happy and most Christian, a title the most glorious, the most magnificent that can be conferred. I congratulate your Majesty that at this juncture you have undertaken the care of preserving the church, not by the application of violent remedies, but by rational means, worthy the name of the Most Christian King; and that in the midst of the present dissensions you have so studied to moderate the violence of opposing parties, that the genuine unadulterated doctrines of Christianity, the glory of Christ, the true dignity of the ecclesiastical constitution, and the tranquillity of the state may be promoted. Nothing can be imagined more becoming a king than this disposition of mind and these proceedings. I beseech your Majesty to persevere in this care and concern for your kingdom: for although public dissension has in some instances furnished occasion of mischief to violent and evil-minded Ecclesiastics, yet good men have brought forward in the church many things which are essentially conducive to its welfare. Although therefore a mischievous disposition of mind ought to be restrained, yet I entreat your Majesty not to be influenced by the bitter sentiments or writings of the calumnious, to suffer good and useful regulations to be abandoned in the churches. For my own part I have never been pleased with those intemperate counsels which have degraded the best and most holy order of the church, and which ought ever to be held in peculiar veneration: and I am well persuaded that all good men in your nation, who value the truth as I do, cherish this feeling. When I received your royal invitation, God is my witness how much I laboured immediately to comply with it; for nothing would gratify me so much as to be of some service to the church according to my feeble capacity, and I indulge the most pleasing anticipations from my knowledge of the piety, the moderation, and the constant aim to promote the glory of Christ displayed by your Majesty. Voræus can detail the numerous difficulties which have delayed my visit, and which, though they should prevent this journey, cannot detach my mind from a steady purpose of checking by my advice and exertions the existing controversies. Voræus however will fully state my views.

“ Finally, I commit myself to your royal favour, promising constantly to contribute my judgment with that of the pious and learned men of the church for the general good. May Christ preserve your Majesty in prosperity and safety, that your government may promote the general happiness of the world and the glory of God.

Your Majesty's

Most devoted Servant,

PHILIP MELANCTHON.

“ From Saxony, the fifth day of September, one thousand five hundred and thirty five.”

In addition to these very curious documents, a further illustration of the dispositions prevalent at this period in the French Court, at least amongst some of its most enlightened ornaments, is afforded by a letter addressed to Melancthon by Cardinal Bellaius, dated the twenty-seventh of June. (p) After applauding the benevolent wishes which he knew from Voræus that he entertained for the general cause of Christianity, the Cardinal proceeds, “ I desire nothing more ardently than that the dissensions which have so long agitated the Christian church may be appeased. Apply the utmost of your power, my dear Melancthon, by the help of God, to promote this general pacification, and you will have the concurrent approbation of all good men, especially of Francis, who, while possessing the supreme authority, is not only the Most Christian King in name and title, but in truth, as I have long had occasion to witness. I hope every thing from your meeting, and the matured advice you will give." The warm attachment of the Cardinal may be imagined from his subscribing himself, "Yours, from my very heart, Bellaius."

In another letter written by William Langey, and dated the sixteenth of July, Melancthon is urged by a variety of arguments to visit France. "I have explained," says he, "to my friends who are interested in the common cause, all circumstances, and have given them your letters and those of Bucer, to peruse. I feel myself somewhat implicated in this affair, and should be sorry for any thing to occur dishonourable to you, or injurious to the cause of truth and the glory of Christ. The Cardinal Langey was shewn the letters you have received from me previous to their being sent, lest any thing should have been written which he might disapprove or deem contrary to the views of the king." He afterwards alludes to the controversy respecting the place of holding the proposed Council, represents the good inclinations of the king, and alludes to a private consultation with Melancthon upon the best and safest means of reforming the state of ecclesiastical affairs. Langey apologizes for the severities which had been inflicted upon some persons for their religious opinions, alleging, what however is not very admissible, that they were only a set of enthusiasts of notorious character, whom Melancthon himself would have been inclined to punish. After urging various other considerations to induce his compliance with the King's request, who, he says, was not only prepossessed in his favour, but naturally acute, prudent and willing to listen to sound argument; he concludes thus, "I exhort you, I conjure you for Christ's sake not to neglect the present occasion of accomplishing a business of all others the most glorious in which mortals can be engaged."

The Sorbonne divines probably would not very readily have united in these pressing solicitations, for how could they forget or forgive the satirical pen of Melancthon? And there is reason to suspect that a temporizing policy more than a spirit of sincere inquiry after truth dictated their prince's invitation. Francis had seized the opportunity afforded him by the full employment of the emperor's confederate forces against the Turks, to renew his claims in Italy, and used every effort to excite in the different princes of Europe a jealousy of his rival's power. But his measures were disconcerted, and from the operation of different causes he was generally unsuccessful. The invitation he received from the associated Protestant princes at Smalcald was therefore at this crisis peculiarly welcome, and he was naturally led to use every endeavour to promote his own views by securing their confidence. For this purpose he negotiated and flattered, accommodating himself to their religious prejudices, affecting a wonderful moderation and even a spirit of pious inquiry in matters of controversy. A very curious affair had been transacted at Paris, to which the preceding letter of Langey refers. With an indiscretion which no one can defend, some of the Parisians who had imbibed the principles of Protestantism (q) posted up hand bills in several of the public places and on the gates of the Louvre, containing reflections on the doctrines, rites and clergy of the church of Rome. The king being highly incensed at these proceedings, issued a general order against heretics; and appointed a solemn procession. The holy host was carried through the city, the king walked with his feet bare and his head uncovered, attended by the queen, the princes of the blood and all his courtiers. Six Lutherans were publicly condemned by the parliament to be burnt, a decree which was executed with the most shocking barbarity before the procession was finished; and others were sought after with the most eager diligence. (r)

(q) MEZERAY in relating this transaction, says they were Sacramentarians. Abregé Chronol. de l'Hist. de France. Tom. II. p. 898.

For the purpose of explaining these circumstances and securing the Protestant alliance, Bellay was sent to the German princes. He was instructed to assure them "that the persons proscribed and punished were guilty of seditious practices, that the king wished for an accommodation on the subject of religion by a meeting of the Parisian and German divines, and that he was particularly desirous of a visit from Philip Melancthon." Cardinal Tournon however, remonstrated violently against this invitation given to a heretic, (s) and the princes of Germany soon saw reason to question the sincerity of Francis. In fact, it is difficult to reconcile his inconsistencies. He protected or persecuted the Reformers as interest or policy dictated. He allowed the Duke of Orleans his second son, to offer the free exercise of their religion to the Protestants in the dukedom of Luxemburg, and his sister the queen of Navarre to promote the reformed cause in her country of (r) SLEID. Hist. 175. DUPIN 181. BELCAR. Com. Ref. Gal. 646.

(s) MALMBOURG. DUPIN.

Bearn. He courted the Reformers yet opposed the Reformation—panegyricized them at Smalcald, yet persecuted them at Paris—almost a Lutheran in Germany, and quite a Catholic in France. (t)

Some of Melancthon's friends urged him to accept the King of France's invitation, believing that it might prove a most favourable occasion for promoting the reformed religion in that country, and for checking the progress of the Catholic persecutions: but others were apprehensive that his visit would be attended with considerable personal danger, and advised him to remain in Saxony. Melancthon himself was by no means indisposed to comply with the king's request, supposing that his presence in France was not unlikely to be attended with some advantage to the Reformation. Luther for similar reasons was very urgent with the Elector to allow his friend to go and alleged that the very expectation of seeing Melancthon had already put a stop to the persecutions in France. (u)

The Elector could not however be prevailed

(t) Francis even permitted Bellay to explain his sentiments to the German princes, on some of the most important subjects of difference, in terms not very dissimilar to those used by the Protestants. SLEID. Hist. 178—180. SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. 103.

(u) LUTH. Op. Tom. VI. 491. SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. III. p. 107.

upon to give his consent. He felt apprehensive of offending the Emperor, and conceived no hopes of promoting any real good to the Reformation by such a permission. Policy of course, dictated a different excuse to Francis, to whom he wrote in a courteous manner, assuring him of his inclination to gratify his wishes, but pleading "the peculiar and distressing aspect of the times and the unpleasant reflections he should be likely to incur. The Wittemberg Academicians, he said, being dispersed by a pestilential disorder and obliged to retire to Jena, he could not possibly at present part with Melancthon. If however his services should hereafter be deemed necessary, and the pressure of present difficulties be somewhat alleviated, he would send a more decisive answer to his Majesty and give him permission to visit France. In the mean time he offered his most ready services in promoting the gospel of Christ, together with the temporal and eternal welfare of the king, his government, and the churches of France."

Melancthon was extremely chagrined at the Elector's interdiction, and it may be justly regretted; for who can doubt that his amiable deportment, elegant taste, nice discrimination and exemplary candour, might have produced a very favourable impression upon a prince, who if he were after all a religious bigot, was much addicted to literature, and might have been moderated, if not changed by mildness? The Langean family would have been gratified and confirmed in their good inclinations—the queen of Navarre would have hailed his visit, and a thousand secret machines might have been set in motion by his influence. But he was obliged to content himself with sending a small treatise into France, containing his opinion and advice on the best means of settling religious controversies, and which though never published is inserted in the collections of Pezelius.

Early in the spring of this year, Doctor Robert Barnes was sent by Henry VIII. King of England to consult with the Saxon Theologians on the subject of the intended divorce of his queen. Upon his arrival most of the professors and scholars were removed in consequence of the plague which raged in Wittemberg, to Jena in Thuringia. Luther, Jonas, Cruciger and Melancthon gave him recommendatory letters to the Elector. He brought letters of invitation to Melancthon who was urged by the King to pay a visit to England. Henry offered him ample security from all molestation, and even hostages if he required it.^(x) Luther was extremely anxious that he should be allowed to go, for “who knows,” says he, “what God may intend to accomplish, his wisdom is greater than ours and his will superior." He wished Melancthon's feelings to be consulted who was deeply disappointed at the Elector's previous refusal of his invitation to France. In his first letter to the King written in March, he compliments Henry in a very elegant style upon his literary inclinations, and after deploring the wretched state of letters in Germany through the intemperate violence of religious controversy, (y) he implores him to use every effort to promote them and to take the persecuted Muses under his protection. (z)

(x) “Egregiam Cautionem imo et obsides.”

By means of Alexander Aless, a Scotchman who went into England, Melancthon took the opportunity of presenting a copy of his Commentary on the Romans to the King, who with a munificence worthy of a distinguished Sovereign, immediately presented him with two hundred crowns and wrote him a letter in which he expresses his high approbation of his extraordinary zeal in defending the Christian religion, and his disposition to assist and promote his good intentions by every means in his power. To this communication Melancthon returned an answer in the following month of December. He compliments the King upon his professed attachment to religious truth, and assures him that these sentiments had afforded himself and others to whom he had read his letters the greatest satisfaction.(a) In addition to Dr. Barnes's commission, Haynes and Mount had been dispatched secretly to Sir John Wallop, ambassador in Paris, for the purpose of dissuading Melancthon from continuing in France if he had undertaken the journey, and to allure him to England.(b) Sir John Wallop was soon able to alleviate the anxiety of the King of England, by assuring him in a dispatch dated the seventeenth of August, that there was reason to believe Melancthon would not visit France. Henry however hastened Mount to him into Germany, with the view of superseding the French ambassador's application : So solicitous were two of the most distinguished Monarchs of Europe to cultivate the friendship and to obtain the advice of Philip Melancthon.(c)

(y) VALENT. BAVAR. Compil. Vol. I. p. 252.

(z) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 26. ad Henric. oct. Reg. Ang.

The original documents are not a little cu-

(a) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 27.

(b) The report of his having actually arrived in France was very general. Tyndal says in a letter to Frith, " Philip Melancthon is said to be with the French King. There be in Antwerpe that say they saw him come into Paris with a hundred and fifty horses and that they spake with him." TYNDAL'S Works, p. 455. fol. 1573. Lond.

(c) STRYPE'S Eccles. Memorials, Vol. I. HERBERT'S Life of Henry VIII.

rious, and shall be quoted for the amusement of the reader. (d)

“ Master Secretary, (e) after our most hearty commendations, ye shal understand that having received the letters sent unto you from Sir John Wallop and shewed the same unto the King’s Majesty, his plesure thereupon was, that we should dispatch these our letters incontinently unto you concerning the accomplishment and doing of these things ensuing.

“ First, his Grace’s plesure is, that you shal immediately upon the receipt hereof dispatch Barnes in post with Deryk in his company into Germany: commanding him to use such diligence in his journey, that he may and it be possible, meet with Melancthon before his arrival in France. And in case he shal so meet with him, not only dissuade his going thither; declaring how extremely the French King doth persecute those that wil not grant unto the Bishop of Romes usurped power and jurisdiction; using in this part al persuasions, reasons and means that he can devise to impeach and let his said journey thither; saying unto him how much it should be to his shame and reproch to vary and go now from that true opinion wherein he hath so long continued: But also on the other side to persuade him also that he may (be willing) to convert his said journey hither; shewing him as wel the conformity of his opinion and doctrine here, as the nobility and vertues of the King's Majesty, with the good entertainment which undoubtedly he shal have here at his Grace's hands.

(d) BRITISH MUSEUM. Cott. MSS. Cleop. E. 6.

(e) T. Cromwell.

“ And if percase the said Barnes shal not meet with him before his arrival in France, then the said Barnes, proceeding himself further in his journey toward the princes of Germany shal with al diligence return in post to the K. H. the said Diryk, of the certainty of the said Melancthon's coming into France and such other occurrents as he shal then know. And if the said Diryk be not now ready to go with him, the King's plesure is ye shal in his sted appoint and send such one other with the said Barnes as ye shal think meet for that purpose.

* * * * *

“ Furthermore, the King's plesure is yee shal upon the receipt hereof immediatly cause Mr. Haines and Christopher Mount, in post to repair into France, to Sir John Wallop in as secret a manner as they can, and coming like his friends to visit him and not as sent by the King. And in case they shal by him or otherwise learn and know, that Melancthon is there arrived, then his Grace wol, that the said Haines and Mount, shal, in such sort, as they be not much noted, resort unto him and for the dissuading of his continuance there, or the alteration of his opinion and the alluring of him hither; to use such reasons and persuasions as be before written, with such other as they can further devise for that purpose. To the which Haines and Mount, the king's plesure is, ye shal deliver like copies of the same Dean's Book(f) and the Bishops Sermons to be shewed unto the said Melancthon, or otherwise used, as may be most expedient for thachyevement of the King's purpose in that behalf.

* * * * *

“ And to make an end, his Grace wol in no wise that Barnes and Haynes shal tary for any further instruction of the Bishop of Canterbury or any other. Having his Grace determined to send the same after by Mr. Almoner and Hethe; but that he Mr. Haynes and Mount shal with al possible diligence depart immediatly in post without any lenger tarying than for this their depeche shal be necessary. So as their abode impeach not the King's purpose, touching the said Melancthon. And thus fare you most heartily wel, from Langley, in much hast, this Monday at 4 of the clock at afternoon.

(f) Richard Sampson Dean of the Chapel.

“ Your loving friends,

“ T. NORFOLK,

“ GEO. ROCHFORD.”

The next letter is from the Secretary Cromwell to Sir John Wallop the King's ambassador in France, from which such parts only are extracted as illustrate the present subject.(g)

“ To my right loving frynd Sir John Wallop, Knyght, the Kinges ambassadour resident in the Corte of Fraunce.

“ After my most hartly recommendacions; these shal be to advertise you that the xviith day of this monthe I receyvid from you a packet of letters; which indelayedly I delyvered unto the Kinges Highnes and conferred with his Grace theeffects both of your letters and al others within the sayd packet beyng directed as wel to his H. as to me. And after his H. had with me perused the hoole contents thoroughly of your sayd letters; perceyvyng not only the liklihod of the not repayr into Fraunce of Philip Melancthon, but also your communications had with the Frenche Kinges Highnes upon your

(g) Ex. MSS. D. G. H. Esq.

demaunde made of the Kynges Majesties pensions, with also your discrete answers and replications made in that behalfe, for the which his Majestie givethe unto you condigne thanks—

* * * * *

“ And touchyng Melancthon—consideryng there is no lykelihood of his repaire into Fraunce as I have wel perceyved by your letters, the K. H. therefore hath appoynted Christofer Mount indelayedly to take his journey where Melancthon is, and if he can to prevent Mounsr. de Langye in such wise as the sayd Melancthon his repaire into Fraunce may be stayed and diverted into England. Not doubting but the same shal take effect accordyngly. And as to Maister Haynes, the Kyng’s plesure is that he shal go to Paris there to lerne and dissiphre the opynyons of the lerned men and their inclynations and affections as wel towards the K. H. procedyngs as to the Busshop of Rome his usurped power and authorite, after such sort as the Kyng’s sayd Highnes hath now written unto hym by his Grace’s letters addressed both unto hym and the sayd Christofer Mount : directyng theym what they shal do yn al thynges commytted to theyr charge at this tyme ; as I doubt not but they wil put thereto theyr devoires for the accomplishment of the Kynges plesure as apperteyneth

.....At Thornebery the xxiiiith day of August.

“ Your assuryd freend,

“ THOMAS CRUMWELL.”

A larger commission was afterwards sent by Henry VIII. to the Protestant princes of Germany, now assembled at Smalcald, consisting of Edward Fox, Bishop of Hereford, Nicholas Hethe Archdeacon, and Dr. Barnes. The opinion which Melancthon formed of them is thus expressed in a confidential letter to his friend Camerarius. “ One only of our present guests Nicholas Hethe, the Archdeacon, excels in amiableness of disposition and sound learning ; as for the others they have no relish for our philosophy and mode of discourse, (γλυκυτητος) so that I shun their society as much as possible.” (h)

In the course of these conferences, Fox represented that the king had abrogated the Popish abuses and had abolished indulgences. He designated the Papal domination by the term Babylonian tyranny, and the Pope he called Antichrist. A variety of articles were drawn up by Melancthon, and some dissertations which the ambassadors brought on their return to England on the marriage of Priests on Monastic Vows, and on the Mass. It is intimated in the conclusion that the Protestants felt surprized at the English decree against abuses, when no amendment was proposed and especially as there was a total omission of the more flagrant abuses of which they complained. In a copy of this decree of Henry VIII. still extant in the German Archives, Melancthon has written in several places in the margin ἄδὲν ὀγίτες, not at all sound.

(h) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. IV. 183.

The great purpose however which Henry really had in view by these negociations, was to obtain ultimately the sanction of the Wittemberg divines to the divorce of his Queen Catharine; but their opinion was unfavourable to his proceedings. They drew up a paper disapproving of the divorce, which was transmitted by the ambassadors;(i) and Melancthon fully concurred with Luther upon the subject.

In this same year (1535) Melancthon's acquaintance with the celebrated Archbishop Cranmer commenced. It seems to have originated in the visit which Alexander Aless, who had been long and intimately acquainted with Melancthon in Germany, paid to England in the month of August. Knowing the Archbishop's generous disposition, Melancthon took the liberty of giving him a recommendatory letter as a learned foreigner, and availed himself of the opportunity of conveying a present to the Archbishop of one of his own books. This was probably his Commentary on the Romans.^(k) Another copy was presented, as we have related, to the King. This Alexander Aless was the same person whom Cromwell took with him to the Convocation in the year 1536, for the purpose of delivering his opinion about the Sacraments, of which he insisted only two, Baptism and the Lord's Supper, were of Christ's original appointment. He wrote also a useful treatise on the subject of Schism, with which the dissenters from the Catholic church were charged; but he was furnished with both matter and argument by Melancthon.

(i) A German copy of this document in the handwriting of Caspar Cruciger, sent from Wittemberg to the Elector is preserved in the Archives of Smalcald.

Aless originally fled with other learned men from Scotland, in consequence of the persecutions of 1534, and was received into Cromwell's family. Henry VIII. is said to have been considerably attached to him, and to have bestowed upon him the distinguishing epithet of his scholar.

(k) Strype says, "he should have supposed it to have been his "Common Places, but that they came out a year after," This is an evident mistake, for though a new edition might have been published in the following year, we have already seen that this chef d'œuvre of Melancthon first appeared in the year 1521.

He was afterwards made a professor in the University of Leipsic.

The recommendatory letters of Melancthon insured his Scotch protegèe a most hospitable reception at the palace of Lambeth, and the Archbishop could not but feel honoured by the sincere praises of his learned and pious correspondent who sought his friendship, and who in his letter said “if the church had but some more such bishops, it would be no difficult matter to have it healed and the world restored to peace.” (l)

Several circumstances concurred at this period to excite that hypochondriacal depression of mind which so much embittered some of the years of Melancthon’s life. He had a narrow escape from lightening, which produced considerable damage in his immediate neighbourhood, and he suffered severely in his back from a fall, but happily it occasioned no permanent injury. (m) The removal of the Academy to Jena, in consequence of a raging infectious disorder, alluded to in the Elector’s letter cited above, exceedingly discomposed and inconvenienced him—but the students and professors returned in the beginning of the year 1536 to Wittemberg.

(l) STRYPE’S Mem. of Archbp. Cranmer, B. III. Ch. 23, 24.

(m) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theol. CAM. Vit. Mel.

The state of his health required an excursion amongst his friends. He was accompanied by Jacob Milichius, a physician to whom he was particularly attached on account of his professional skill, devoted friendship, and literary taste. He was a native of Friburg, and for a series of years led a useful and eminent course of public life at Wittenberg. At the age of fifty-nine he died, much and generally lamented.⁽ⁿ⁾ Camerarius alludes with evident pleasure to the few days passed in the companionable society of Melancthon at Tubingen, and notices the useful advice he gave respecting the management of the University, and the general regulation both of religious and literary concerns. A violent contention had arisen on the subject of giving letters of recommendation and conferring honorary titles upon the students. Many learned men were applied to for their opinion; among the rest Melancthon, who sent in a written statement of his views, and the reasons which influenced his decision. He conceived that they had been advantageous, especially as such testimonies, publicly and solemnly bestowed upon meritorious students, tended to secure the avenues to clerical office against the intrusion of ignorance and incapacity.

He addressed a long letter to Brentius on the subject of the Academy at Tübingen, which is dated from the palace of the Duke of Wirtemberg. It is not to be wondered at that he felt a peculiar interest in this early scene of his studies and labours. He mentions his satisfaction in some of the professors, but intimates the great deficiency that existed in the Theological departments, and urges his correspondent, by desire of the Duke, to spend one year at Tübingen, till some suitable person could be procured to occupy that important situation. He deplores the general state of literature throughout the whole of Upper Germany, and expresses great anxiety to ameliorate the state of the Academy.(o)

(n) CAM. Vit. Mel.

He was doomed to incur in consequence of this journey what he so often experienced, the attacks of malevolence. A variety of vexatious reports were put in circulation, and instantly credited by the weak and the wicked propagators of mischief. Some asserted that he had separated from the Reformers and quarrelled with Luther, to whom his philosophical notions were disagreeable—that he would not return to Wittemberg, or if he did, no further cordiality was likely to subsist between them. The sowers of dissension however were disappointed of the produce they anxiously expected. His methods of conveying instruction, and especially his uniform and zealous efforts to purify the logic of the schools, and terminate the endless disputations of former times by introducing juster principles of reasoning, were exceedingly grateful, instead of being, as his adversaries calumniously misrepresented, disgusting to Martin Luther. That eminent Reformer always sought his advice, and with his characteristic ingenuousness acknowledged his superiority.

(o) MELANCTH. Ep. IX. ad Joan Brentium.

An anecdote which is related of them is confirmatory of this statement. Luther was writing the following words, “Res et verba Philippus ; verba sine rebus Erasmus ; res sine verbis Lutherus ; nec res, nec verba Carolostadius.” Philip Melancthon is both substance and words—Erasmus words without substance—Luther substance without words—Carlostadt neither substance nor words”—when Melancthon came in unexpectedly, and overlooking him said with a smile, “As to Erasmus and Carlostadt it is well judged and censured, but too much is attributed to me, and good words as well as matter ought to be ascribed to Luther, for he speaks exceedingly well.” (o)

Among a variety of other important labours, Melancthon was very much occupied at this time with the furious zealots who had created so much disturbance in Germany under the name of Anabaptists. During the temporary removal of the Academy to Jena, he and Cruciger were indefatigable in their efforts to reclaim them, and it must be owned were in some degree succesful. Melancthon wrote an excellent treatise against them in the German language.^(r)

Soon after his return from Jena, he was engaged in a conference with Bucer and Capito on the sacramental controversy. Pursuing with unabated ardour the great purpose of a general re-union among the Reformers, Bucer and Capito had repaired, in the month of January, to an assembly of the ministers and magistrates of the Reformed Cantons of Switzerland, at Basil. They urged a union with the Lutherans, which they deemed more than ever probable from their decreased animosity. A meeting was afterwards convened in May at Eisenach, to which the Swiss divines sent their confession of faith; but as Luther could not personally attend, Bucer and Capito proceeded to Wittenberg, where, after several conferences with him and his associates, Melancthon was appointed to draw up a formula on the sacrament, which, it is remarkable, the inflexible Lutherans, the moderate Reformers, and the whole Synod composed of the ministers of Upper Germany, concurred in signing. Thus the purpose of unanimity was obtained to a very considerable extent, and was celebrated on the occasion with great mutual congratulations; (t) though it may be questioned, from a perusal of this document, whether Bucer and his moderating associate did not manifest too much of a servile and temporizing flexibility.

(q) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. III. p. 115.

(r) Myconius says, “Proruperunt lacrymæ Capitoni et Bucero et utrinque cancellatis manibus et gestibus piis Deo gratias egimus.”

vate Afflictions—Draws up a Plan of Reform for the Elector Palatine—Engages in the Ordination of George Prince of Anhalt—Sketch of his Life—Epigram by Melancthon.

PAUL III. who had succeeded to the Popedom in the year 1534, appeared more disposed than his predecessor to convene a general Council, and sent circular letters throughout the states under his jurisdiction, appointing a time and place, namely, the twenty-seventh of May, 1537, at Mantua. The confederate Protestant Princes re-assembled together at Smalcald, and in the February preceding the proposed Council, Vorstius, the Papal Nuncio, and Heldus, Vice-Chancellor to the Emperor, came to announce it, and exhort them to attend. This occasioned long and close deliberations.

The Wittemberg Theologians were summoned to the meeting at Smalcald, and as Luther was incapable of attending in consequence of a severe illness, the chief trouble, accompanied as usual with no inconsiderable odium, devolved upon Melancthon. They were required to make an accurate comparison of the different sentiments which prevailed among themselves, in order to terminate the existing disputes, and devise some common form of doctrine for the Protestant churches; then to determine upon those articles of faith which from their radical importance were to be retained and avowed at all hazards, in order finally to ascertain what might be conceded to the Catholics for the sake of restoring peace and harmony. (s)

Whether from the flattering caresses of others, or from the deliberate judgment and affectionate disposition of his own mind, Melancthon could not be induced to renounce the hope of promoting concord, not only between those who were perpetually contending on the subject of the Sacramental controversy, but between the Reformers and Catholics. With respect to the first question, relative to an examination of the points of difference which divided the Reformers themselves, he complains that a calm and impartial investigation could not be obtained, owing to the rigidity of some, and the apprehension of others lest instead of promoting harmony, the discussion of these differences should inflame resentment. With respect to the second, he was deputed to compose an essay on the power and primacy of the Roman Pontiff, and on the jurisdiction of bishops. This performance proved of signal use, and was noticed with marked approbation in the Recess or Decree of the Convention. (t) It exceedingly confirmed the minds of all, and removed the suspicions which

(s) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. IV. ep. 196 ad Camerarium. PEZEL. L. I. p. 269.

(t) " Postquam Theologos nostros primarius et Sacræ Scripturæ peritos hic congregavimus, illi de omnibus articulis his calumniators had excited even in the Elector himself, who did not sufficiently distinguish between a bias to Popery and that strong desire for peace which Melancthon laboured to effect, and which he cherished the hope of obtaining without the sacrifice of principle. He thought it proper to contend only about essentials; here he was firm—in other respects he aimed with incessant, but useless toil, to produce reconciliation. In fact the standard of his piety was superior to that of the age in which he lived, and unlikely to be duly appreciated or sufficiently influential in the boisterous hour of religious innovation. The performance referred to was written with no less zeal against the excessive domination of Rome and her ecclesiastics than Luther himself would have displayed, though with milder words; and it affirmed that little or no hope could be entertained of the results of a Council so constituted as that to which the Pope had summoned the Princes of Christendom. Similar sentiments are expressed in the correspondence which was carried on between the confederate Princes and the king of France. In the preceding year Francis had written letters to the assembly, which intimated some offence. He perceived, he said, from the report of his ambassador, that they did not cherish exactly the sentiments he had expected, but he was disposed to overlook any contempt they had manifested, from his ardent desire to promote a general union in Christendom, especially between Germany and France; and he was desirous they should send a deputation to him. They replied in letters written in their name by Melancthon, who may perhaps not inaptly be termed the pen of the Reformation,—"That they certainly had intended no contempt, and fully concurred in his views respecting mutual union. They excused themselves from sending deputies as he desired, not feeling themselves warranted to do so; and with respect to a Council, if it were not free, but ordered by the Pope merely for the purpose of condemning them, it would confirm instead of remove abuses, and inflame greater discord. They alleged the Bull itself, in which their sentiments were condemned already, as a proof that the Council would not be a free one." The King replied in a courteous manner declaring that on this subject they were completely agreed.

confessionis & apologiæ quam Augustæ exhibuimus, Christianum habuerunt colloquium et per Dei gratiam unanimiter in omnibus inter se consenserunt; articulum vero de primatu Pontificis Romani LATIUS & MELIUS CONCEPERUNT, ut scriptum ostendit."

It is due to the Princes assembled at Smalcald to introduce the following passage from their Recess. (u) "As it has hitherto been the case, and still is, that some who pretend to holy orders adhere to the Popish doctrines and ceremonies, and cannot agree with our faith nor conform to our worship, whence monasteries and other ecclesiastical property have or will hereafter come into our hands, the Reverend and Spiritual Christian Teachers, Preachers and Pastors have advised and requested us that some of this property should be devoted to the honour of God and the advantage of the Christian cause, as our pious will may direct; we therefore unanimously agree, that the parochial churches in our several districts and jurisdictions, shall be provided with learned, pious and honourable Teachers, Preachers and Pastors; and that in their different situations they be maintained in a decent and respectable way with their wives and families. Also we appoint Superintendants to watch over the said Pastors and Ministers, that they keep sound doctrine and live and walk as becometh Christians. And we order the provision of suitable Funds for Schools of Education, adapted to the local circumstances of each district, that youth may be trained up therein in good morals and sound learning, so that our churches may not in future be unsupplied with suitable Pastors and Ministers. We further order proper Funds to be appropriated to the use of those who shall devote themselves principally to the study of the sacred

(u) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. III. p. 157.

Scriptures. Moreover, we order the erection and endowment of Hospitals for the reception of the poor of both sexes; and in fine, that every one in every place shall exert himself to cause such institutions to be erected, provided and supported, wherever the necessity exists, and whatever else the duty of Christian Princes and Magistrates may require."

Melancthon was solicited by the Senate of the city of Augsburg to pay them a visit, but many and weighty reasons induced him to decline their invitation. They were about establishing a public library, and even applied to the Elector to permit this visit; but he answered that he could not possibly spare him, both on account of the discussions upon the subject of a general Council, and of the great resort of students to Wittemberg. (x)

In fact, Melancthon could not command a moment's leisure, and in addition to his exertions in the public cause, he was incessantly pestered with the reproaches of the malevolent who misinterpreted all his actions, and with the unjust censures of many with whom he was connected who disliked his conciliating spirit. It was reported that in consequence of considerable differences of opinion which occasioned some discussion at Smalcald, he was alienated from his own party, and several Princes studiously endeavoured to induce him to relinquish his existing engagements, and become a professor in their Universities; but he never sought private emolument or honour to the neglect of public duty, and therefore could not be gained. But as his friend and biographer Camerarius remarks, no integrity or innocence of character can escape suspicion and slander. He could not even receive a letter from the learned Sadolet, because it came from Italy, without being exposed to suspicion and charged with the crime of being connected with Catholics. This letter is produced by Camerarius as a specimen of that elegant latinity for which the writer was distinguished; we may be allowed to translate it as being no less honourable to the spirit and character of him who wrote than of him who received it.

(x) GASSAR. Annal. MSS.

“ James Sadolet, Cardinal of Carpentras, sends his most affectionate salutations to Philip Melancthon.

“ During my residence at Carpentras, where I had imagined myself fixed for life, but whence I am suddenly recalled to Rome by the mandate of the Pope, I was perpetually conversant with your writings, which I read both on account of the ability they discovered and the general elegance of the composition. Often in the midst of this pleasurable employment, I became gradually enflamed with affection, and cherished a great anxiety to commence a friendship with you. For although some difference of opinion exists between us, this need not cause dissension among well educated men.

“ At the moment I was deliberating about writing to you to open, so to speak, the doors of friendship, suddenly I was sent for to Rome, on account of an approaching Council, and a consultation respecting various affairs, on which it would become necessary soon to deliberate. I had superintended my spiritual charge for the period of ten years, when thus summoned by the secret appointment of the best and wisest of Pontiffs, to be invested, ignorant and unskilled as I was, with the dignified office of Cardinal. This occasioned delay in transmitting as I wished a letter to you: for it is impossible to express how many anxieties, cares and troubles, the translation from my former peaceful and happy life into a tumultuous and bustling one, has occasioned me. This indeed was sure to happen, for my judgment avoided it and followed my former course of life. Both, however, fell out contrary to my original inclinations, so that I cannot rejoice in what I was unwilling to possess, and not be unaffected with grief in losing what I wished to enjoy. But thus appointed by the providence of God, I shall endeavour by his aid properly and fully to discharge this honourable office.

“As my mind begins to emerge from the crowd of difficulties which beset me, I have resolved no longer to defer writing, and thus give you a pledge, my dear Philip, of my affection and of your attraction. My esteem arises from your exemplary virtues, and may I not hope that you will equally reciprocate it from your native kindness? You will, I doubt not, accede to my request and eager desire of friendly intercourse. I am not one of those who instantly cherish a violent hatred because another differs in opinion, an arrogance and a vanity to which my nature is totally repugnant. I honour intellect, virtue and literature, which, as you possess them in no common degree, excite a proportionate regard for you. I doubt not your sentiments are similar to my own: for a person so accomplished in elegant literature cannot be otherwise than kind and courteous, and I indulge the greatest confidence that my letters will not be unacceptable, because however disjoined by distance of place, we may be united in spirit and affection. The object of my greatest anxiety and desire therefore is, to persuade you to admit me into a principal share of that regard you feel for those, and I know they must be very numerous, who have been induced from the celebrity of your name to solicit your friendship. Nothing would afford me greater pleasure than to have an opportunity of expressing and proving my attachment to you, and if you will furnish me with any such occasion, I shall esteem it as a high obligation. I am ready with the greatest zeal to do whatever I know may be gratifying to you; no one shall exceed me. Attachment to you and the nature of my office, require a constant concern for literary men. Farewell, most learned Melancthon, and let me share your best affections.

ROME, July 15, 1537."

The justice of Luther's remark upon the preceding letter may be left to the reader's own determination. "Sadolet," says he, "who had been the Pope's Secretary fifteen years, a very witty and learned man, wrote in a most courteous manner to Philip Melancthon, but exceeding craftily, according to the Italian custom, in order that, through a Cardinalate, they might have bought him on their side, which was done by the Pope's directions; for the good gentleman, Mr. Pope, is much perplexed, not knowing how to fall upon us."(y)

Application was again made from the Court of Great Britain for a deputation of the Saxon divines and Reformers to take a journey, for the purpose of conferring with learned men of that kingdom about ecclesiastical and other important affairs. William Paget and Christopher Mount were employed on this mission. They were instructed to go through France and act in concurrence with the King, and Gardiner the English ambassador at the French Court: but the main purpose of Henry VIII. was to induce the German princes to disregard both the Emperor and the Pope, and to refer all the points of difference to himself and the King of France. (z) A visit from Melancthon in particular was exceedingly urged, but year after year slipt away, and other concerns occupying his attention the journey was never accomplished.

A legation however was sent consisting of Francis Burkhard or Burgart, Vice-Chancellor of the Elector of Saxony, George a Boneyburg, a Nobleman, a Doctor of Laws, and Frederic Myconius, superintendant of Saxe-Gotha. The former was charged with a letter from Melancthon to the King, in which he expresses his affectionate friendship for the Vice-Chancellor, who would be able to explain his high regard for his Majesty and his disposition to devote himself to the public good by the illustration of Christian truth. "Private men," says he, "very much need the aid of distinguished princes and states, and your Majesty has excited the greatest hopes in every country that you would promote the wishes of the pious for the Reformation of the churches. What else does the Papal faction aim at than the total extinction of divine truth and the infliction of the most barbarous cruelties upon Kings, Princes and nations, and the support of the Catholic abuses by a system of boundless tyranny in the church? Such being the dangerous situation of her affairs, I will not cease to exhort and implore your Majesty to pay attention to the circumstances of the Christian church now a suppliant at your feet, to promote some firm and durable union, and to dissuade other princes from connecting themselves with Popish counsels. This is an affair of the greatest importance, and therefore worthy the attention of a King so superior to others in learning and wisdom.”(a)

(z) HERBERT'S Life of Henry VIII. p. 425.

The ambassadors were received in the most courteous manner, and the King of England frequently expressed his anxious desire to see Melancthon.(b) But nothing of any consequence was effected by this journey, and the commissioners were at length dismissed with strong protestations of royal friendship and an invitation to return during the ensuing year. The King sent letters to the Elector of Saxony full of the strongest professions of kindness to himself and the reformed cause, and expressive of the greatest anxiety to enjoy a visit from Melancthon, "from whose distinguished erudition and sound judgment all good men," says he, "form the highest expectations."

(a) The original letter is preserved in the BRITISH MUSEUM, Cott. MSS. Cleop. E. 6.

(b) SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 180.

The princes having discovered by means of some intercepted letters a secret correspondence between the German and English Anabaptists, wrote a long and elegant epistle to Henry VIII. containing a statement of the pernicious doctrines these persons so eagerly disseminated, and warning him of the danger likely to result from their fanatical proceedings unless prevented by a bold and timely interference. This epistle was composed by Melancthon.(c)

A Protestant conference was held at Frankfurt in the beginning of the year 1539, to which place Melancthon accompanied his prince. Violent proceedings being apprehended he was deputed to write a paper on the subject of lawful defence, which he executed with great care and success. From this assembly a deputation was sent into England, which carried another of his letters to Henry VIII. for, being affected by the testimony of his friends respecting the royal benignity, and desirous of promoting in the king every good inclination, he thought it proper to cherish this correspondence. His letter dated Frankfort, March 26, 1539, was calculated to produce a good effect. After expressing his grateful sense of his Majesty's regard for him, which was manifested afresh in his discourses with the commissioners, he proceeds, "I commend the cause of the Christian religion to your Majesty's attention, for your Majesty knows that the most important duty of great princes is to regard and promote heavenly truth, on which account God associates them with himself in the office of ruling. I am desirous as I have written before, that a union upon the basis of doctrinal agreement should be effected among those churches which reject the domination of Rome. This would tend to promote the glory of God and conduce to general tranquillity. Your Majesty has happily begun the removal of some superstitious practices, I entreat you to proceed to others. The intention of our adversaries is apparent, but they can never suppress our doctrine; God himself will be the keeper of our states and princes. They are always most anxious for public peace and tranquillity, but if our enemies resort to arms the princes will not be deficient in their duty. I frequently call to mind the inscription upon one of King Edward's coins, "Jesus autem transiebat per medium eorum" Jesus passed through the midst of them, by which that wise monarch doubtless intended to intimate that the governors of kingdoms are divinely protected whilst they defend righteous causes; and, indeed, that it is truly heroic to bear arms in defence of the church against tyrants. It is said that Ajax asked Achilles what were the greatest and most difficult of all labours? To which he replied, "those which are undertaken for friends." Ajax inquired again, "What then were the most pleasant and easy?" He answered, "the same." The hero intimated by this reply, that nothing could be more delightful than to perform even the severest duties for the public good, and that he could cheerfully sustain the heaviest cares for this purpose. Such was their greatness of mind who were ignorant of the true God; how much more does it become Christian princes to endure labour and danger for the church of Christ, when they know that they are divinely appointed to this office and are promised celestial rewards for their services. I will not cease therefore to exhort your Majesty to persevere in promoting the cause of the Christian church, and in resisting the tyranny and violence of its adversaries."(d)

(c) SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 180.

Melancthon addressed letters also to Cromwell and Cranmer, and afterwards being denied a journey to England by the Elector, who acted with the concurrent advice of Luther, from an opinion that nothing could be done with the infatuated monarch; he again, at the instigation of the Landgrave of Hesse, wrote him a long epistle in a most magnanimous spirit, many parts of which merit quotation. (e) “ Many pious and learned men in Germany have indulged the hope that your Majesty’s authority would have produced a considerable alteration in the conduct of other Kings, and that the German princes in particular might have been influenced to relinquish the unworthy cruelty of their proceedings and deliberate on the correction of abuses. You were hailed as the promoter and leader of this most holy and illustrious design. Now, alas! your prejudices have wounded our minds most deeply: the animosity of other princes is confirmed, the vexatious obstinacy of the impious is increased, and the ancient errors are strengthened. The bishops no doubt contend that they do not maintain errors, but true doctrines and a divine right; and though by no means ignorant that they are in fact opposed to the divine authority and the apostolical constitution of the church, yet men will find out very fine interpretations, σοφα φάρμακα artful poisons as Euripides calls them, when policy requires it, in order to furnish a specious pretext for their errors. Sophisms of this description may not be so much admired in England for their wisdom, but they are very much in repute at Rome, where the Cardinals Contaranus, Sadolet and Pole, are applying a new paint and varnish to old abuses. In Germany these sophisms have depraved the minds of many persons of distinction, and I am not surprized that multitudes are deluded by such fallacies; and though you are neither deficient in erudition nor in judgment, yet even wise men are sometimes diverted from the truth by specious arguments.

(d) The original letter is in the BRITISH MUSEUM, Cott. MSS. Cleop. E. 5.

(d) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 28. It is dated 1529 by mistake, instead of 1539. Comp. PEZEL. Consil. Theol. P. I. p. 343. MELANCTH. Op. Tom. IV.

“ It cannot be denied that the church of Christ was for a long period veiled in tremendous darkness. Human traditions, the torment of pious minds, were most shamefully introduced to the utter corruption of divine worship. Vows, gifts, vestments, meats and drinks, a vain repetition of prayers, indulgencies, and the worship of images with every species of manifest idolatry being substituted for the true service of God, exhibited a striking resemblance between the religion of heathens and of Rome. The real doctrines of repentance and forgiveness of sin through faith in Jesus Christ, justification by faith, the distinction of Law and Gospel and the use of the Sacraments were unknown. The keys of authority were given into the hands of the Pope to support his tyranny both in civil and ecclesiastical affairs. The law of celibacy produced licentiousness of manners, but God has in some measure dispersed the darkness by the reformed doctrine, for this light of truth which now shines in the churches must be attributed to him, because no human skill could have removed the prevailing errors. The Spirit of God has predicted that in the last times a violent contention would arise between the Saints and Antichrist, and that Antichrist supported by bishops, deceivers and princes, would oppose the truth and slay the pious. These very things are at this moment transacted. The tyranny of the Romish hierarchy has partly introduced and partly confirmed the existing abuses, and as Daniel predicted, ‘his look is more stout than his fellows.’ (f) We rejoiced in the separation of your Majesty and hoped that the English church would flourish again, but alas! your bishops still adhere to Antichrist in all his idolatries and errors. The Articles they have published are most craftily selected and support every human tradition, especially vows, celibacy and confession. In retaining the doctrine of private masses they not only confirm priestly domination, but every dangerous error of Popery, artfully avoiding improvement that their dignity and wealth may be secure. That this is the work of the bishops is obvious; it speaks for itself.

“ I implore you by our Lord Jesus Christ to mitigate and amend this episcopal decree, by doing which you will both consult the glory of Christ and the welfare of all your churches. May you regard the ardent desires of the pious throughout the world that Kings would use their influence to effect a Reformation of the church, to remove unauthorized services and to propagate evangelical truth! May you consider those holy persons who are in bonds for the gospel and are the true members of Christ! for if this decree be not cancelled the bishops will practise their severities to an incalculable extent. Satan himself can alone inspire this opposition to Christ; they minister to his rage; he impels them to these cruel massacres. All good men entreat and implore you not to listen to the impious, the cruel sentiments, and sophistical cavils in circulation against us, but to regard our just and well-founded petition. In doing this, you will secure no doubt a great and a divine reward, as well as the highest degree of celebrity among all Christians. Jesus Christ himself will judge of the conduct of men to his church, and while human language exists these transactions will be transmitted to all future ages. If our churches be indeed the churches of Christ and we seek his glory, the cause will never want patrons and protectors, who will bestow due praises on the deserving, and merited contempt on the persecutor. Hungry, thirsty, naked, bound, Christ himself complains of the fury of the Romish hierarchy and the iniquitous severities practised by many Kings and Princes: he entreats for the wounded members of his body, that his true church may be defended and the gospel honoured;—to acknowledge, to entertain, to minister to HIM, is the duty of a pious King, and a most grateful service to God.”

New cares and labours awaited Melancthon upon his return from Frankfort, but they were pleasurable ones. George, Duke of Saxony, Sovereign of Misnia and Thuringia, the inveterate enemy of the Reformation being dead, his brother Henry who succeeded to his dominions espoused it with the utmost zeal. Melancthon and Luther were immediately employed to regulate the affairs of the University at Leipsic and to investigate the state of the churches. (g) The Reformed cause now rapidly spread in every direction, and other princes especially Joachim II. the Elector of Brandenburg and son-in-law to Sigismund the King of Poland embraced it. Raynald quotes some letters written by Cœchæus, in which he imputes the blame, as he calls it, of this change, to Melancthon and Vicelius; and Seckendorf has preserved a pleasing letter on the subject composed by the former, addressed in the name of the Elector of Brandenburg to the Polish sovereign. (h)

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel.

The Protestants having solicited the Emperor to appoint a general conference between them and the Catholics, in conformity with the resolutions which had been adopted for this purpose at Frankfort, he directed them previously to deliberate on the concessions they were prepared to make to their adversaries. They met at Smalcald in the year 1540, and replied by the pen of Melancthon, that they should adhere to their Confession at Augsburg and the subsequent Apology (i) Amidst a multiplicity of other public engagements he found time also to write a long and admirable vindication of the Reformers, addressed in the name of the Elector of Saxony and the confederate princes, to Charles V.; and another piece against Sebastian Frank, Caspar Schwenckfeld and others, who maintained fanatical opinions, and pretended to extraordinary revelations.

The Diet which the Emperor had appointed

(h) SECKEND. Hist. Luth. Lib. III. p. 234 and 241.

(i) Melancthon in a letter to Camerarius says, "all the Theologians agreed that the bishops should enjoy their jurisdiction, if they would embrace evangelical truth and remove abuses out of the church." Nothing of this kind however is inserted in the decree of the convention. MEL. Ep. Lib. IV. ep. 222. SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 258.

to be held at Spires, was in consequence of the plague removed to Hagenaw. On his way thither Melancthon became dangerously ill, his disorder arising chiefly from the morbid melancholy incident to his constitution. The immediate cause of his present extreme dejection of mind is to be traced to the misconduct of the Landgrave of Hesse, who was forming an illicit connexion, which Melancthon foresaw would prove detrimental to the Reformation by furnishing an occasion of reproach to its virulent adversaries. Varillas and Bossuet are by no means backward to avail themselves of the circumstance. (k) Being in consequence of this indisposition detained at Vinaria, he experienced the kindest attentions from the Elector and his friends, who immediately sent for George Sturciad, a physician of Erfurt to whom he was peculiarly attached. Luther also hastened to his friend; and his cheering presence contributed not a little to aid the powers of medicine in producing his convalescence. As he had previously felt a deep persuasion that he should die, he had written his will and deposited it with Cruciger; (l) and on his way while crossing the Elbe, he suddenly uttered what happily proved an unfounded prediction:

(k) MELANCTH. Ep. ad Bucard. Mythob. ap PEZEL. Cons. p. 394. SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 277. BOSSUET Hist. des Variations.

(l) Vid. Appendix IX.

“ Viximus in Synodis et jam moriemur in illis.”

In councils we have lived, in councils now shall die. (m)

The interesting account written by Solomon Glass and preserved amongst the original manuscripts of the German princes, shall be presented to the English reader. “ When Luther arrived he found Melancthon apparently dying. His eyes were dim, his understanding almost gone, his tongue faltering, his learning imperfect, his countenance fallen, incapable of distinguishing any one, and indisposed to all nourishment. At such a sight Luther was in the most terrible consternation, and turning to those who had accompanied him in his journey, exclaimed, ‘ Alas, that the devil should have thus unstrung so fine an instrument !’—Then in a supplicating posture he devoutly prayed, ‘ We implore thee, O Lord our God, we cast all our burdens on thee and WILL CRY TILL THOU HEAREST US, pleading all the promises which can be found in the Holy Scripture respecting thy hearing prayer, so that THOU MUST INDEED HEAR US to preserve at all future periods our entire confidence in thine own promises.’(n) After this he seized hold of Melancthon’s hand, and well knowing the extreme anxiety of his mind and the troubled state of his conscience, said, ‘ Be of good courage, Philip, YOU SHALL NOT DIE: although God has always a sufficient reason for removing us hence, he willeth not the death of a sinner but rather that he should be converted and live,’—it is his delight to impart life, not to inflict death. God has received into his favour the greatest sinners that ever existed in the world, namely Adam and Eve, much more will he not cast thee off my dear Philip, or permit thee to perish in grief and guilt. Do not therefore give way to this miserable dejection and destroy thyself, but trust in the Lord who can remove it and impart new life.' While he thus spake, Melancthon began visibly to revive, as though his spirit came again, and was shortly restored to his usual health."

(m) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum. CAM. Vit. Mel.

(n) This petition is translated literally from the original German. “ Allda muste mir unser Herr Gott herhalten denn ich warff ihm denn sack für die thür und riebe ihm die ohren mit allen PROMISSIONIBUS EXAUDIENDARUM PRECUM die ich aus der heiligen schrift zu erzehlen wuste dass er mich müste erhören, wo ich anderst seinen verheissungen trauen solte.” Seckendorf remarks that this language is so peculiar and forcible as scarcely to admit of being properly rendered into Latin, and the same may be said of English. His words and version are as follow: “ Parrhesia hæc vix exprimi Latinè potest, sensus est, Se cum Deo magnâ cum confidentiâ egisse, omnesque ei objecisse et veluti inculcasse, quæ ex Scripturis allegari poterant, promissiones de audiendis precibus, itaque cogebatur (ait) me exaudire, si fiduciam meam in promissiones suas conservare vellet.” SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 314.

After his recovery Melancthon wrote thus to Camerarius, " I cannot express the pain I have suffered during my illness, some returns of which I often feel. I witnessed at that period the deep sympathy of Luther, but he restrained his anxieties that he might not increase mine, endeavouring to raise me from my desponding state of mind, not only by admitting kind consolation but salutary reproof. If he had not come to me I should certainly have died." To Burcardus Mythobius he wrote, " In the summer I received two letters from you, the one at Smalcald, the other in Thuringia, at a time when I was confined by extreme illness occasioned only by overwhelming anxiety of mind on account of some affairs relative to others, of which you also complain. I must have died if Luther had not recalled me from the gates of death."

The Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Hesse not being present at Hagenaw, no conclusive measures were adopted, but another Diet was appointed to meet at Worms in October. Thither the Emperor dispatched his Commissioner, Nicholas Granville, and the Pope his Nuncio, Campegius Bishop of Filtri : Vergerius also appeared in the name of the king of France. It was long before the preliminary arrangements could be adjusted. On the twenty-eighth of November Melancthon thus addresses his friend Jerome Baumgartner. “The church of God does not often engage the serious attention of Kings, Pontiffs and Princes; for their minds are devoted to ambitious projects, and other occupations. Truth is more generally esteemed and the church upheld by private persons and families; it was not one of the kings of Phœnicia or Syria that cherished Elijah, but a poor widow, in whose house the true religion was maintained. Jonah is said to have been the son of a widow. Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were not only private individuals, but exiles; and therefore I trust that God will still preserve his church amidst the present troubles. I exhort you to pursue your pious labours and cares with increased alacrity and renewed hope. The history of our convention may soon be told: nothing is done except deliberating about the plan of conducting the disputations. You remember the saying of Aristotle, ‘It would be a happy thing for the world if artists were to be made the sole judges of the arts’—but we are favoured with canonists and nobility as arbitrators, who are quite unacquainted with our concerns, and these again have certain managers, as they are termed on the stage, or, as Æschines calls them, περὶ τὰς ἀγορᾶς pettifoggers of the forum who cajole the public.”(o)

In a letter to Granville he intimates his opinion, “that good humoured discussion might tend to remove sophisms and obscurities out of the way, and diminish the number of existing differences: at the same time he nobly avows his dislike of all inexplicitness and dissimulation which rather perplex than disentangle controversies; resolving for his part, whether in private or public conferences, TO SPEAK WHAT HE THINKS, FIRMLY BUT MODESTLY, AND TO CONCEDE WHAT HE DEEMS MAY BE CONCEDED, WITH UNAMBIGUOUS INGENUOUSNESS.”(p)

The conference being at length opened in January, 1541, a debate between Eckius and Melancthon ensued. The latter characterizes his antagonist as an apt disputant, but “more solicitous of contending for the prize of ingenuity than for truth.”(q) At the close of the third day Granville received an order from the Emperor to suspend the proceedings, and meet him in person at a Diet which he appointed at Ratisbon. It was opened early in the spring,

(o) MELANCTH. Ep. 51. ad Hieronym. Baumgartnerum.

(p) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. II. 2.

(q) MELANCTH. Acta Wormat. ap. Pref.

and all the Princes of the Empire were either personally present or sent deputies. Unfortunately in going Melancthon was overturned in the vehicle in which he travelled, which accident, though it was not a fatal one, so essentially injured his right hand, that he never afterwards recovered the proper use of it. His wrist was dislocated by the fall.(r)

The Catholics and Protestants having agreed to a proposal by the Emperor that the controversies about religion should be settled by conference between select persons from both parties, his Imperial Majesty claiming the right of nomination, chose Julius Pflug, John Eckius, and John Gropper on the one side, and Philip Melancthon, Martin Bucer, and John Pistorius on the other. They were commanded to lay aside all passion, and respect only the glory of God. Granville, the Emperor's prime minister and commissioner at the conference, delivered a book to this Committee, which he said the Emperor desired them to peruse, but they were at liberty to approve or amend it as they pleased. It contained twenty-two articles, and was supposed to be written by Gropper.(s) This paper was artfully constructed, but only led to long and fruitless discussions.

(r) “ In aditu Bavarie dextra mihi, cum everteretur currus quo vehebar, adeò duriter quassata est, ut ossa εν κάρπω, ut Medici vocant, luxata sint. Ideo nunc sine cruciatu literas pingere non possum. MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 41. ad Dom. Georg. Princip. Anhalt. Comp. CAM. Vit. Mel. MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

Both parties appear to have raised objections against it; and Melancthon remarks in writing to one of his friends, that Eckius declared in a letter to the assembly of Princes, that he never had and never would approve this book, because it Melancthonized too much, for he suspected it to be either his dictation, or written with his advice and concurrence. But he totally dis-claims it, and says that Eckius injured Gropper by this imputation.(t) The legate however resented the Protestant objections, and the Diet was concluded by his Imperial Majesty's commanding that the Augsburg decree should continue in force, and all prosecutions in the Imperial chamber be suspended.(u)

In the course of the late discussions Me-lancthon remarked, that "the Sacrament had no significance beyond its divinely appointed use, and that Christ was not present for the sake of the bread but of the recipient;" a sentiment which so delighted Luther when it was

(s) It is also attributed to Cochläus and to Bucer.

(t) MELANCTH. Ep. 16. ad Brentium.

(u) At Ratisbon every effort was made to discredit Melancthon with the Emperor; but he addressed a letter to him refuting every charge in the most satisfactory manner. MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. II. i.

repeated to him, that he exclaimed, "Macte Philippe, tu eripuisti Pontificiis quod ego non ausus fuisset; i. e. "Admirable Philip, thou hast seized from the Popedom what I should not have dared to attempt!" Eckius himself was exceedingly confounded, and as persons commonly do in similar circumstances, he uttered a violent speech in default of argument, and went home in a fit of indignation, which together with an unusual quantity of wine at supper the same evening, operated so powerfully as to produce a fever. He never again returned to the conference. Granville appears to have been considerably affected by his opponent's statements, for a few days afterwards he said, "I have been thinking, Philip, for these several days past, very closely upon your arguments, and I really perceive this controversy to be a most difficult one, and well worthy of itself to occupy the attention of a Council."

Melancthon had declared at the commencement of these discussions, Se mori malle, quam conscientiam & veritatem lædere & certissimè ex mærore moriturum, si id faceret: "that he would rather die than injure truth and violate his conscience, and certainly if he could possibly act so he should die with grief;" a noble declaration, and finely illustrated by the following incident. Eckius, during the heat of disputation, made use of some puzzling sophism, at which Melancthon paused, to revolve the statement in his mind, and at length replied, "I will give you an answer to-morrow." "Oh," said his antagonist, "there is no merit or honour in that, if you cannot answer me immediately." To which he replied in these memorable words, "Mi Doctor, non quæro meam gloriam hoc in negotio, sed veritatem: cras, volente Deo, me audies. My good Doctor, I AM NOT SEEKING MY OWN GLORY IN THIS BUSINESS, BUT TRUTH: I say then, God willing, you shall have an answer to-morrow."(x)

The same remarkable superiority of mind to all the incentives of ambition, was apparent in every part of his conduct. As he did not pursue fame but truth, in his numerous conferences with the Catholics, so he did not aspire after rewards, but the promotion of the public good, in his Academical labours. Indeed he was almost scrupulous to an extreme. Luther, in a letter addressed to the Elector of Saxony on the third of July, mentions Melancthon's hesitating to accept an increase of his salary to the amount of a hundred florins, and his wish to continue his Greek Lectures without any remuneration that the ordinary stipend might be devoted to augment the revenue of the University. “But,” says Luther, “he has sustained the greatest share of Academical labour for upwards of twenty years past, and surely he has the greatest right to enjoy in quiet some of the profits. The junior masters, who are his scholars, are capable of teaching the Greek language. He has been a kind of general servant to the whole institution, and well merits the bounty of your Highness. The whole Christian world is his debtor, and blessed be God, the Popish fraternity are more afraid of HIM and his SCHOLARS than all the learned besides put together.”(y)

(x) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

A long and violent altercation between the Elector and the Popish party at Naumburg respecting the election of a bishop, occupied a considerable part of the year 1542. The state of the district rendered it a question of great importance. The majority of the ecclesiastical orders adhered to the degrading superstitions of Popery; but the inhabitants both of the towns and villages in the vicinity of the Electorate were panting to enjoy the doctrines of the Reformation. The Catholic influence was exerted to introduce Julius Pflug, one of the persons appointed in the select Committee at the recent conferences of Ratisbon, a man estimable in himself, but a decided Papist; the Elector on the other hand, tenacious of his right of nomination, and anxious to introduce a Reformer, after long and mature deliberations fixed upon Nicholas Amsdorff, who was eventually installed. On this occasion Luther and Melancthon, with many persons of eminence attended. The account of the popish writer Maimbourg is sufficiently amusing. After intimating his displeasure at the pride and insolence of the abettors of Lutheranism subsequently to the Council of Ratisbon, and mentioning the choice of Julius Pflug, he says, "the Duke of Saxony openly declared the election invalid, because he did not conform to the Augsburg confession, and nominated Nicholas Amsdorff in his stead, one of the principal and most zealous of the Lutherans, upon whom his master Luther, who played the Pope at Wittemburg, laid his hands and made him a bishop!" The Emperor felt also excessively exasperated at these proceedings; but desired Pflug to exercise patience, "for," says he "your cause shall be mine;" and accordingly a few years afterwards he employed the strong arm of imperial power to eject Amsdorff, who fled to Magdeburg, instating Pflug in the diocese of Saxe-Naumburg. (z)

(y) SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 356 and 381.

It was a mortifying circumstance to the

(z) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theol. p. 69, 70. SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 382 and 392.

Papists that the wide-spreading light of the Reformation extended at length into COLOGNE; and that the Archbishop and Elector Hermannus, or Herman, Count de Wied, whom Maimbourg and other writers highly panegyryze, both for his personal accomplishments and ardent zeal for the Catholic religion, became anxious at this period to reform his diocese. It was not indeed a sudden or momentary feeling. At the time of the Protestant convention at Frankfort, in the year 1539, the Archbishop sent Peter Medmannus to confer with Melancthon, and to request a visit from him; but he could at that time only return a congratulatory letter, in which he says, that “ though his Lordship’s personal regard to him was most grateful to his feelings, yet he was still more rejoiced on account of the public cause, as the Archbishop appeared desirous of applying proper remedies to heal the wounds of the church, instead of adopting measures calculated only to inflame and exasperate them.” (a) Towards the close of 1541, Hermannus sent for Martin Bucer, and had several conferences with him in the following year at Bonne; the result of which was a resolution to confer with proper persons, and pursue effectual means for the reformation of his diocese. On the fifteenth of January, 1543,

(a) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. III. ep. 38.

he dispatched letters to the Elector of Saxony, requesting him to allow Melancthon to come; who replied, after a considerable lapse of time, that he had given him permission to be absent from the University six or seven weeks. The letters of Melancthon sufficiently explain the transactions at Bonne. To Luther he writes thus on the nineteenth of May. "The Bishop wishes a formulary of doctrines and ceremonies to be drawn up, similar to that of the Nuremberg church, and to be given to him for his inspection. I have been engaged in this the last three days. He is desirous of introducing pure doctrinal truth, and of exterminating whatever rites are now publicly practised in opposition to it; but the Canons in general resist this innovation, though there are some amongst them who aim to restrain the violence of their brethren. The Bishop has been fiercely threatened to be driven from his dignity; on which account the Landgrave has written to the College, and openly avowed his own determination, and that of the confederate Princes, to unite, if it be requisite, in his defence. All the cities excepting Cologne, including the major part of the nobility are desirous of a better ecclesiastical constitution, which they see plainly enough to be necessary. I do believe that scarcely any part of Germany was in so barbarous and heathenish a state as this, which the prevailing idolatrous practices sufficiently evince; but I perceive the discourses of Bucer and Pistorius are much regarded, and I think they preach the truth. There are others also who teach the people sound doctrine, and administer the Sacraments as they ought, in some of the neighbouring towns and villages." In another letter, addressed to Camerarius, he says, "You could not witness without tears the wretched state of these churches, in which the people are daily crowding to the images, and this with the ignorant multitude is the sum and substance of religion. (b) The aged Prince rightly judges, that reform is necessary, and seeks to introduce it. I have only at present begun the formulary of doctrine and ceremonies which is to be proposed to the churches. A few assist the Prince; at Cologne he is opposed, but in various places are to be found men of piety and correct sentiments." Again upon his return in August he writes, "After Bucer and myself had finished our work for the regulation of the churches, the aged Bishop, sending for his Dean and assistant Stolbergius, a man of sense, and some other leading persons,

(b) He makes similar complaints in letters addressed from Bonne to his friends Pomeranus and Caspar Cruciger. He speaks of the Pastors, where any were to be found, as of the most illiterate class. "Pastores aut nulli sunt, aut indoctissimi. Tota religio populi est in adorandis statuis." MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 83, 84.

desired me to read through the whole book in their presence, to which he paid the greatest attention, remarking upon many parts of it, sometimes suggesting very proper alterations, sometimes after discussing a point submitting to our opinion in preference to his own. This labour occupied four hours every morning in six successive days. I wondered at the assiduity and diligence of the old man.”(c)

When the Archbishop presented the Articles, which the deputation of Reformers had drawn up, to the Chapter at Cologne; they requested time to examine it, while the Protestant doctors were expelled the city. With the former request he readily complied, but alleged in reference to the latter, he could not consent unless they were convicted of false doctrines and immoral conduct. An acrimonious publication under the following title soon appeared; “Judicium Deputatorum Universitatis et Secundarii Cleri Coloniensis de Doctrinâ et Vocatione Martini Bucerii ;” upon which Melancthon remarks; “The publications of the

(c) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. ep. 74. Lib. IV. ep. 298, and ep. 304. In a letter to one of his other friends, dated Bonne, he mentions that the Archbishop turned to Luther's German Version of the Scriptures to verify every quotation. Mel. Ep. ad Joan. Cæsar. BOSSUET exhibits the good Archbishop in a very different light. Hist. des Variations, Tom. I. p. 456.

Cologonians is issued. It is not so much against Bucer as against the doctrine of our churches in general, and against our princes. It is the worthy effort of a well-fed Carmelite, and priest of Bacchus and Venus. They had entitled it, "The Judgment of the Clergy and the University;" but when some of the more sane members of the College saw it, and perceived it was much more worthy of buffoons than of Clergymen, they insisted upon a change of the title and protested they did not approve such a production; upon which, instead of The Clergy, it was agreed to use the term Inferior Clergy, by which some understand the baser description. Lutheranism is prodigiously railed at; and upon the subject of marriage the vilest and most obscene language is used, such as would almost disgrace a prostitute. The jests are culled from the comedies of Plautus, whose writings I dare say are more charming to this Carmelite than the Psalms of David."(d)

Bucer and Melancthon both published a reply to this unclerical publication; that of the latter is one of his very best writings. He first singles out the dissentient individuals, for whom he cherishes a sincere regard; and then with a cogency of argument and a pungency of satire, attacks the remaining part of the fraternity. He tells them that neither Eckius nor Pighius, madly as they wrote, ever equalled the atrocious language of these Colognians. He jokes upon the word secundarius in the title-page, and supposes they mean the low and degenerate part of the community. On the subject of the mass he remarks, that there is no more reason for adoring the bread in the Sacrament of the supper, than the water in the ordinance of baptism. "If Ambrose and Augustine were to rise from the dead, to say nothing of the apostles, and to witness the superstitious mockeries now practised, the long processions of wooden, silver, and marble images, the superintendants and expositors of sacred mysteries carrying about the bread, and the surrounding multitude prostrating themselves in adoration of it, they would be alarmed, and ready to ask into what heathen land they had got, and what new ceremonies were invented since their day, for they could not imagine themselves in Christian churches. But when they came to be informed that this was the manner in which the Lord's Supper was observed, they would burn with grief and indignation, and begin to exhort the people to return to the genuine use of the Sacrament, and to the proper services of religion. There was formerly a custom of a similar nature prevalent in Persia, in which the sacred fire was carried about to be worshipped by the populace, and three hundred and sixty-five priests, answering in number to the days of the year, led the way, carrying particular ensigns." To this statement he adds a solemn exhortation and relates a circumstance, which he declares he received from the best authority, respecting a priest who went to Tubingen, where he carried about some relics consisting of bones, promising to every one that kissed them a security from the plague during the period of a whole year. When Prince Eberhard, who was possessed both of wisdom and influence, had him taken up for his ridiculous impudence, the priest alleged that he had certainly stated what was most true, because the people did not in fact kiss the relics, but only the glass case in which they were put! "Such," says Melancthon, "are the miserable shifts to which you resort to excuse your ecclesiastical abuses, and think to escape the censures of the pious: the people in the mean time being confirmed in error and superstition." He ridicules their pretended attempts at reform representing them as "willing to wipe the dust off the images in their temples, to new colour the old worn out pictures upon the walls, and passing an oracular decree to double the size of the square altars, that they may have a more magnificent appearance.

(d) PEZEL. Cons. Tom. I. p. 536. MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. III. ep. 75.

They enact laws against letting the beards grow, and concerning the vain repetition of unintelligible prayers. These are the mighty things which they require to be restored, and which they complain of the Prince for hindering.”(e)

Unhappily, in consequence of the firm resistance of the chancellor, canons and divines of Cologne, to the reforming plans of the good Archbishop, the Popish religion was still maintained in that Electorate. They did not hesitate to avow “that they would rather live under a Turkish government than under a magistrate who approved and defended such a reformation.” But the city of Hildesheim abolished the Catholic superstitions, and embraced the Protestant faith.(f)

The University of Wittemberg received their illustrious Professor with the most marked respect, after he had finished the transactions at

(e) The Pope thinking it necessary to shew the Protestants that he was not averse to every kind of reformation, had appointed four Cardinals and five other eminent persons to draw up a plan for the reformation of the church; but it was extremely superficial and partial. It was published about the year 1539 at Antwerp, with the answer of Cochläus to the objections of Sturmius, who, as well as Luther and Melancthon had turned it into ridicule. In this plan the most intolerable grievances of which the Protestants complained are left totally unredressed.

(f) DUPIN.

Cologne. Sensible of the lustre his still increasing celebrity shed upon their whole body, impressed with a deep sense of his public efforts in the cause of the Reformation, his academical labours and his numerous private virtues, he was welcomed home by a sort of public entrance. The students and most of the professors in the different branches of literature, went out to meet him on the road, and to hail his return.(g)

But the cup of human life is never replenished with unmingled good; the sweet and the bitter are mixed in their due proportions by an all-wise providence. It seems upon a close inspection as if human happiness were more equally distributed by the unsparing hand of divine liberality than the envious and the petulant too frequently imagine. Great talents, or external splendours are sometimes connected with inward heartburnings and domestic anxieties; while poverty and rags are often the only patrimony of noble and wisely contented spirits. Sorrow, like death, visits alike the palace and the cottage.(h) Melancthon became at this period involved in the utmost perplexity and grief by the improper behaviour of one of his

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel.

(h) Æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas

Regumque turres.—————

HOR.

sons-in-law, and the removal of his daughter into Prussia, circumstances which have been mentioned in an early part of this work, in connexion with a view of his domestic character. (i) His mind, always tending to despondency, was much agitated also by the loss of several of his friends, particularly Valerius Cordus, a person of elegant taste and extensive erudition. His death occurred at Rome, and was supposed to have originated in excessive fatigue, incurred by a laborious search, amongst the cold mountains and vallies of Italy, after herbs, roots and plants for medical purposes, to which he was devoted. The Sacramental controversy was renewed with increased asperity, and so violent was Luther, and so conciliating was Melancthon, that, availing themselves of the favourable moment, their mutual enemies attempted to foment their dissension, but in vain; for though at one period a cloud seemed to be gathering over the brightness of their friendship, it soon entirely disappeared. In fact Luther seems to have kindled with unusual rage against the Sacramentarians, and to have used a provoking intemperance of language, which, though his conscientious convictions and the barbarous usages of the age may be admitted as some extenuation, could not by any means be approved by his amiable friend. At the same time the Protestants in France were in a deplorable situation, and Francis and Charles V. were engaged in a furious war, which however terminated in September, 1544, by a treaty of peace at Crespy.

(i) Vid. Ch. 4.

The Elector Palatine Frederic, successor to Lewis, being animated with zeal to reform the churches under his jurisdiction, obtained in the beginning of the year 1545 a plan for this purpose, drawn up by Melancthon, and presented with his signature, in conjunction with those of Luther, Bugenhagen or Pomeranus, Cruciger and Major. It is a judicious compendium, in six divisions, stated in these words: (h)

“ The true and salutary administration of the Christian Church chiefly consists in these six particulars:

“ I. In pure doctrinal truth, which God has revealed, transmitted, and commanded to be taught in his church.

“ II. In the legitimate use of the Sacraments.

“ III. In the maintenance of a gospel ministry, and the due obedience to Pastors, according to the will of God, who has promised to afford his presence and protection to such a ministry.

“ IV. In the preservation of strict and holy discipline, by the proper exercise of ecclesiastical authority and jurisdiction.

“ V. In a proper regard for the establishment of schools, and the direction of necessary studies.

“ VI. To these it is proper to add, the support of officers who may be wanted for necessary services in the church.”

Another very important duty in which Melancthon was engaged, was the episcopal ordination of the Prince of Anhalt, which shed such a pleasing lustre on the present year. The reader will not deem it an uninteresting digression to introduce this circumstance in a connected but necessarily brief sketch of his life.

GEORGE, Prince of Anhalt, and Count of Ascania, was descended from the Dukes of Saxony, and was born on the fourteenth of August, 1507. His father, Prince Ernest of Anhalt, gave him a liberal education at the University of Leipsic, under George Forchem, who was no less celebrated for correctness of conduct than for capacity as a preceptor. Camerarius, Cruciger and others studied under this eminent tutor, who had the pleasure of finding in the Prince of Anhalt an apt and diligent scholar. He devoted a considerable degree of attention to the civil law, which his rank in life seemed particularly to require.

At the age of twenty-two his proficiency in every branch of knowledge, and his reputation for eloquence were such, that Albert Elector of Mentz chose him to be one of his Council, and he became, in consequence, very much engaged in state affairs. At the rise of the Reformation his ardent mind soon interested itself in the pursuit of truth; he perfected himself in the Greek and Hebrew languages, searched the Holy Scriptures with diligent investigation, read the best commentators amongst the Fathers, and cultivated an intercourse with some of the most learned men. Often with tears he was known to pray, "Deal with thy servant according to thy mercy, and teach, O teach me thy righteousness!"

At length he openly embraced the Reformation, planted seminaries of learning, and strenuously opposed the Popish superstitions. Multitudes saw and rejoiced in the wide-spreading light, and he constantly co-operated with his brothers in establishing the reformed religion in their respective territories. For the purpose of more extensive usefulness, he was induced in the year 1545, to accept the bishopric of Mersburg, in Saxony, an office upon which he entered with fervent prayer, and afterwards discharged with extraordinary assiduity. His letter of episcopal ordination, written by Melancthon, is thus expressed :

“ We give thanks to God the eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who of his infinite goodness has instituted a gospel ministry for the recovery of the fallen race of mankind, and will maintain it through the successive ages of time till the resurrection of the dead ; and who raises up learned and suitable persons, giving command to his church that such should be called to the office ; and promises through their ministry to dispense the doctrine of the remission of sins, the gift of the Holy Spirit and eternal life. We beseech him not to permit the light of his gospel to be extinguished, but that he would raise up faithful men to advocate and uphold the pure and salutary doctrines of Christ, and now in this territory gather to himself a people to celebrate his praises to eternity. As the most reverend and illustrious GEORGE, PRINCE OF ANHALT, COUNT OF ASCANIA, LORD OF BERNBURG, &c. appointed to this gospel ministry over the church at Magdeburg, has been called in a regular and pious manner to the discharge of ecclesiastical functions in the bishopric of Mersburg, certain serious and learned persons who superintend the neighbouring churches, and whose names are under-written, have been sent for to be present conformably to the custom of the ancient primitive churches, that they might here give their public testimony of ordination in addition to the general call to the office. We are therefore assembled for this purpose because we well know that the illustrious prince GEORGE understands and firmly embraces the pure doctrines of the gospel, which all the churches of God in these parts unite with one voice and one soul with the church universal in professing, and the glory of which is to promote holiness and virtue. We have attended to his ordination in the apostolic manner of laying on of hands; for Paul admonished Titus that Presbyters should be every where ordained to teach and govern the churches. Be it known that this ordination to an ecclesiastical function derives its authority from apostolic practice, and as priests are appointed to teach and rule churches, to watch over doctrinal sentiments and moral conduct, let the words of the son of God be in constant recollection, ‘When thou art converted strengthen thy brethren.’ And as Christ sitteth at the right hand of the Father to give efficacy to the public ministry, we pray that he would rule over this whole district and bless this ordination. ‘Whoso loveth me and keepeth my words, him will my Father love; and we will come to him and make our abode with him.’ Such is his promise, and we exhort the prince to be encouraged by the declaration; for though the government of a church is attended with many and great dangers, nor can human wisdom avail for such an undertaking, yet let him know that God is truly present and will constantly dwell wherever his Gospel is preached; that he will defend and support it. With this conviction the labours of such a ministry may be undertaken and sustained. MERSBURG, Aug. 3, 1545.”

This eminent person discharged the duties of his sacred office with exemplary diligence. His whole time was devoted to preaching, reading, writing, devotional exercises and the affairs of the church. He never intentionally injured any one, but benefitted many both publicly and privately. He was a promoter of peace amongst the princes, settling many of their disputes, and restraining turbulence and faction, being himself superior to all motives of mean ambition. He sustained many and great injuries with the utmost magnanimity, lived a life of devotion with God and resignation to his will, often admonishing others to cultivate similar feelings. After lingering under a painful disease, during which he settled the affairs of his church, engaged in the most ardent devotions, frequently conversed on the most interesting religious topics and daily read the Sacred Scriptures, particularly the prophetic and apostolic writings, “on the seventeenth of October, 1553, his spirit was called away from this mortal state to the assembly of the heavenly church.”(l)

(l) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum. Vit. Georg. Prin. Anhaltini.

The most celebrated German poets wrote elegies upon his death. Two epigrams by Melancthon are preserved, one of which shall be inserted.

Ascaniæ stirpis virtus est clara triumphis:
 Ordine quos numerant secula longa patrum.
 Cæsar in Adriaco quum gessit littore bellum,
 Et fregit venetas Maximilianus opes:
 Duxerat Ascaniâ natus de stirpe Rodolphus:
 Fixit et in Veneto multa trophæa solo.
 Nunc ad majora decora, hæc laus magna, Georgi, Accedit, verè principe digna viro:
 Quod sic doctrinam reliquis virtutibus addis,
 Ut verum celebres pectore et ore Deum:
 Et Christi illustres ingentia munera scriptis;
 Justificâ supplex quæ capis ipse fide:
 Exemploque Esdræ populum dum jure gubernas:
 Doctrinæ spargis semina pura simul.
 Summe Deus, solus qui das felicia regna, Ascanios fratres, te precor, ipse regas!

For ages past behold Ascania's line,
 In martial virtues and achievements shine!
 When through the coasts of Italy afar,
 Imperial prowess poured the tide of war;
 Then Maximilian—then Rodolphus gains
 Trophies of valour on Venetian plains:—
 Still to sustain the glory of his race
 A GEORGE is giv'n, the high descent to grace:
 Though for each manly virtue far renown'd,
 With brighter honour, brighter glory crown'd,

He lov'd the truth—the God of truth he serv'd,
The faith of Christ he honour'd and preserv'd;
Like Esdra ruling well, but on each hand, Spreading the seeds of truth throughout the land.
'Tis thine, Great God! 'tis thine alone to cause Nations to triumph in their kings and laws,
To rule o'er rulers, and assign their place;
Oh, condescend to bless the Ascanian race!

CHAP. XI.

A. D. 1546, to A. D. 1550.

Persecuting measures—Death of LUTHER—Melancthon's FUNERAL ORATION for him—Tributary lines—Remarks on the friendship of Luther and Melancthon—Position of Public affairs—The Emperor and the Protestants at open war—Perfidy of Maurice—Captivity of John Frederic and imprisonment of the Landgrave---Diet at Augsburg---The INTERIM Meetings of the Wittemberg and Leipsic Divines---Melancthon's publication on indifferent things---Extracts from his reply to the Interim---Curious preface to an English translation of it---The virulent opposition of Flaccus Illyricus to Melancthon ---Reply of the latter.

PERSISTING in his resolution notwithstanding the objections of the Protestants, the Roman Pontiff summoned a general council to be held at Trent, while the Emperor at the Diet of Worms in the year 1545 used every effort to persuade all parties to acquiesce in that appointment. It was in vain ; and the pen of Melancthon was again employed to prepare a publication in the name of the Reformers, containing the chief reasons which induced them to dissent from the Papal decree. It is entitled, “ Causæ, quare et amplexæ sint, et retinendam ducant doctrinam, quam profitentur Ecclesiæ, quæ Confessionem, Augustæ exhibitam Imperatori sequuntur et quare iniquis iudicibus collectis in Synodo Tridentina ut vocant, non sit assentiendum;” and “on account of the excellence of the matter, the weight of the argument, and a certain original beauty of style, cannot fail of profiting every reader.”(m) It is inserted in the fourth volume of his works.

The Emperor being exasperated at the continual objections raised against the council, departed at last from his usual course of conduct and determined to settle all religious disputes by force of arms. The Elector of Saxony and the Landgrave of Hesse immediately adopted proper measures for their own defence. At Worms the clergy of Cologne had presented a petition to the Emperor, against the proceedings of their Archbishop in establishing the reformed religion, and he instantly took them into his protection, not only interdicting by his imperial letters any molestation of the Catholics in the electorate,

(m) SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 602.

but summoning the Elector to appear before him within thirty days. The Pope issued a similar summons for sixty days to the Archbishop, Dean and five Canons of Cologne, who had espoused his cause. In the succeeding January, 1546, the Protestant princes assembled at Frankfort, made common cause with the persecuted Archbishop, and united to defend themselves against the violent designs of the Emperor.⁽ⁿ⁾

If ever the presiding genius of Martin Luther were requisite to direct the intricate concerns of the Reformation, the present crisis seemed particularly to demand his talents. The gathering tempest frowned with a portentous aspect upon all Germany; the newly launched vessel in which many of their princes had embarked with a noble and adventurous spirit, and which had hitherto been driven about by so many raging winds, became at this time exposed to a storm of unusual violence, and every voice was lifted up to demand the pilotage of the first and in many respects the greatest of the Reformers. It is not easy therefore to express or imagine the consternation with which the princes and Reformers in general, and his most intimate friend Melancthon in particular received the intelligence of his death at this alarming period. In consequence of repeated attacks of the stone his constitution had been declining for many months, and early in the morning of the eighteenth of February, 1546, he died at Eisleben his native place, whither he had gone a second time to settle some existing differences between the Counts of Mansfeld. A few hours afterwards Jonas communicated the melancholy tidings to the Elector of Saxony, and requested his Highness to inform his wife, Melancthon, Pomeranus and Cruciger. In the first journey to Eisleben a short time before, Melancthon had accompanied him and must have deeply regretted his absence on the last painful occasion. When he first received the intelligence of his death, he exclaimed, "My Father! my Father! the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof!"^(o) He was interred at Wittemberg. Pomeranus preached a funeral sermon, and Melancthon pronounced the following

(m) SLEID. Hist. p. 310, 340, 351, 355. SECKEND. Hist. Lib. III. p. 566, 570, 613.

ORATION.

"Although amidst this general mourning my voice is obstructed by deep affliction and tears, yet something I would attempt to say; not to eulogize the dead as the heathen do, but to admonish the living in this vast assembly, and especially to impress just sentiments upon the junior part of the auditory respecting the government of the church and its dangers, that they may learn what to desire and by what examples to regulate their lives. Wicked and infidel men represent every thing in the present apparent confusion of human affairs as the result of mere chance, but confiding in the numerous and explicit declarations of God himself we distinguish the church from the promiscuous multitude of mankind, and affirm it is under divine superintendance and protection. To this we constantly look, obeying our lawful governors, and cherishing a pious reverence for those guides and instructors whom we choose.

(o) 2 KINGS ii. 12.

“ It will be necessary to advert to these considerations as often as the name of the Reverend Doctor MARTIN LUTHER, our most beloved father and teacher is introduced, whom we love and honour, detestable as he appears in the eyes of many wicked men, and whom we know to have been raised up by heaven as a minister of the true gospel, by evidences which notwithstanding the charges of our opponents, prove that his doctrines were neither seditious nor dispersed abroad with a blind and impetuous zeal.

“ In this place and on these occasions, many things are usually said in a panegyrical

strain respecting the personal endowments of the deceased; I propose however, to omit these, and advert chiefly to his ecclesiastical function. Intelligent and pious persons will admit, if he were the means of promoting useful and necessary truth in the church, we ought to be grateful to the Providence of God for raising up such a light, while his labours, faith, perseverance and other virtues ought to be duly acknowledged and his memory tenderly cherished by all worthy men.

“ The Apostle Paul represents Christ as ‘ having ascended on high to give gifts unto men,’ that is, the preaching of the gospel and the Holy Spirit; for the purpose of communicating which, ‘ he gave some apostles, and some prophets, and some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers;’^(p) selecting them from amongst those who read, study and delight in the sacred writings. Nor are they only called into the Christian service who occupy the more ordinary stations, but others are frequently introduced under the direction of learned men into this holy warfare, and it is both pleasing and profitable to witness the care of God to his church throughout all ages, in sending a continued succession of useful men, that as some fall in the glorious field, others may instantly rush forward to take their places. The first of our race who nobly occupied the foremost ranks were Adam, Seth, Enoch, Methuselah, Noah and Shem. The latter being yet alive and dwelling in the neighbourhood of Sodom, when the inhabitants of the earth forgetting the instructions of Noah and Shem, became addicted to idolatry; God raised up a coadjutor of Shem in the person of Abraham, to co-operate in the great work of propagating divine truth. To him succeeded Isaac, Jacob and Joseph, who kindled the light of true religion in Egypt, at that period the most flourishing empire in the world; and to them Moses, Joshua, Samuel, David, Elijah and Elisha, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel and Zachariah. After them arose Esdras, Onias and the Maccabees; then Simeon, Zacharias, John the Baptist, CHRIST and his Apostles. I am delighted to contemplate this unbroken succession, which affords conspicuous evidence of the presence of God in his church. The apostles were succeeded by a troop, so to speak, of inferior warriors, but nevertheless distinguished of heaven, Polycarp, Irenæus, Gregory of Neocæsarea, Basil, Augustin, Prosper, Maximus, Hugo, Bernard, Taulerus and others. And although the latter ages present a more barren prospect, God has always preserved a proportion of his servants upon the earth; and now through Martin Luther a more splendid period of light and truth has appeared.

(p) EPH. iv. 8. 11.

“ To this enumeration of the most eminent amongst the sons of men who gathered and reformed the church of God, may be added others who may be regarded as the flower of mankind. Solon, Themistocles, Scipio, Augustus, and others, who either established or ruled over mighty empires were indeed truly great men, but far, far inferior to our illustrious leaders Isaiah, John the Baptist, Paul, Augustin and Luther, and it becomes us to study this distinction. What then are those great and important things which Luther has disclosed to our view, and which render his life so remarkable; for many are exclaiming against him as a disturber of the church and a promoter of inexplicable controversies? I answer, that when the Holy Spirit in his regulation of the church reproves the world for sin, dissensions arise out of the pertinacity of wicked men, and they alone are culpable who refuse to listen to the proclamation of the eternal Father concerning his Son, ‘ This is my beloved Son, HEAR HIM.’ Luther explained the true and important doctrine of penitence which was involved in the profoundest darkness. He shewed in what it consists and where refuge and consolation could be obtained under a sense of divine displeasure. He illustrated the statements of Paul respecting justification by faith and shewed the distinction between the law and the gospel, civil and spiritual justification. He pointed out the true principle of prayer and exterminated that heathenish absurdity from the church, that God was not to be invoked if the mind entertained the least doubt upon an academic question. He admonished men to pray in the exercise of faith and a good conscience to the only Mediator and Son of God, who is seated at the right hand of the Father making intercession for us, and not to images or deceased saints according to the shocking practice of the ignorant multitude. He also pointed out other services acceptable to God, was singularly exemplary himself in all the duties of life, and separated the puerilities of human rites and ceremonies which prevent instead of promoting genuine worship, from those services which are essential to obedience. In order that heavenly truth might be transmitted to posterity, he translated the prophetic and apostolic writings into the German language with so much accuracy, that his version of itself places Scripture in a more perspicuous light than most commentaries. But he published also various expositions upon the sacred writings which in the judgment of Erasmus by far excelled all others; and as it is recorded respecting those who rebuilt Jerusalem, 'with one hand they laid the stones and with the other they held the sword,' so while he composed annotations on Scripture replete with heavenly instruction and consoled afflicted consciences by his pious counsels, he was necessitated at the same time to wage incessant war with the adversaries of evangelical truth. When it is recollected that this truth, especially the doctrine of faith and the remission of sins, is not discoverable by the merely human eye, it must be acknowledged he was taught of God, and many of us have witnessed his anxious solicitude to impress the great principle of acceptance by faith. Multitudes of the saints will therefore praise God to all eternity, for the benefits which have accrued to the church by the labours of Luther. To God their gratitude is primarily due, and then they will own themselves much indebted to his labours, although infidels who ridicule the church in general will consider these noble performances as no better than empty trifling or absolute insanity. The true church does not as some falsely affirm promote intricate disputations, throw out the apple of contention and propose the enigmas of the fabled Sphinx; for to those who judge seriously and without prejudice it is easy from a comparison of opposite opinions to perceive what are consonant to the statements of heavenly truth and what are otherwise. Christians are no longer in a state of hesitation on the subject of existing controversies, for when God determined to reveal his will and display his character in the sacred writings, it is not to be imagined that such a communication would be ambiguous like the leaves of the ancient Sibyl.

“ Some, by no means evil-minded persons however, express a suspicion that Luther manifested too much asperity. I will not affirm the reverse, but only quote the language of Erasmus, ‘ God has sent in this latter age a violent physician on account of the magnitude of the existing disorders,’ fulfilling by such a dispensation the divine message to Jeremiah, ‘ Behold I have put my words in thy mouth. See I have this day set thee over the nations, and over the kingdoms, to root out and pull down, and to destroy and to throw down, to build and to plant.’ (q) Nor does God govern his church according to the counsels of men, nor choose to employ instruments like theirs to promote his purposes. But it is usual for inferior minds to dislike those of a more ardent character. When Aristides observed the mighty affairs which Themistocles by the impulse of a superior genius undertook and happily accomplished, although he congratulated the state on the advantage it possessed in such a man, he studied every means to divert his zealous mind from its pursuits. I do not deny that ardent spirits are sometimes betrayed into undue impetuosity, for no one is totally exempt from the weaknesses incident to human nature, but they often merit the praise assigned by the ancient proverb to Hercules, Cimon and other illustrious characters, ἀκομφορ μέν, ἀλλὰ τὰ μέγιστα ἀγαθὸς ‘rough indeed, but distinguished by the best principles.’ So in the Christian church the Apostle Paul mentions such as ‘war a good warfare, holding faith and a good conscience,’ (r) and who are both pleasing to God and estimable amongst pious men. Such an one was Luther, who while he constantly defended the pure doctrines of Christianity maintained a conscientious integrity of character. No vain licentiousness was ever detected in him, no seditious counsels, but on the contrary, he often urged the most pacific measures; and never, never did he blend political artifices for the augmentation of power with ecclesiastical affairs. Such wisdom and such virtue I am persuaded do not result from mere human skill or diligence, but the mind must be divinely influenced, especially when it is of the more rough, elevated and ardent cast like that of Luther.

“What shall I say of his other virtues? Often have I myself gone to him unawares and found him dissolved in tears and prayers for the church of Christ. He devoted a certain portion of almost every day to the solemn reading of some of the Psalms of David with which he mingled his own supplications amidst sighs and tears; and he has frequently declared how indignant he felt against those who hastened over devotional exercises through sloth or the presence of other occupations. On this account, said he, divine wisdom has prescribed some formularies of prayer, that our minds may be inflamed with devotion by reading them; to which in his opinion reading aloud very much conduced. When a variety of great and important deliberations respecting public dangers have been pending, we have witnessed his prodigious vigour of mind, his fearless and unshaken courage. Faith was his sheet anchor, and by the help of God he was resolved never to be driven from it. Such was his penetration, that he perceived at once what was to be done in the most perplexing conjunctures; nor was he as some supposed negligent of the public good or disregarding of the wishes of others, but he was well acquainted with the interests of the state, and pre-eminently sagacious in discovering the capacity and dispositions of all about him. And although he possessed such extraordinary acuteness of intellect, he read both ancient and modern ecclesiastical writings with the utmost avidity and histories of every kind, applying the examples they furnished to existing circumstances with remarkable dexterity. The undecaying monuments of his eloquence remain, and in my opinion he equalled any of those who have been most celebrated for their resplendent oratorical powers.

(r) 1 TIM. i. 18, 19.

“ The removal of such a character from amongst us, of one who was endowed with the greatest intellectual capacity, well instructed and long experienced in the knowledge of Christian truth, adorned with numerous excellencies and with virtues of the most heroic cast, chosen by divine Providence to reform the church of God, and cherishing for all of us a truly paternal affection—the removal, I say, of such a man demands and justifies our tears. We resemble orphans bereft of an excellent and faithful father; but while it is necessary to submit to the will of heaven, let us not allow the memory of his virtues and his good offices to perish. He was an important instrument in the hands of God of public utility; let us diligently study the truth he taught, imitating in our humble situations his fear of God, his faith, the intensity of his devotions, the integrity of his ministerial character, his purity, his careful avoidance of seditious counsel, his ardent thirst of knowledge. And as we frequently meditate upon the pious examples of those illustrious guides of the church, Jeremiah John the Baptist and Paul, whose histories are transmitted to us, so let us frequently reflect upon the doctrine and course of life which distinguished our departed friend. Let the present vast assembly now unite with me in grateful thanks and fervent supplications, saying in the spirit of ardent devotion—‘ We give thanks to thee Almighty God, the eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the author and founder of thy church, together with thy co-eternal Son and the Holy Spirit, wise, good, merciful, just, true, powerful, and sovereign, because thou dost gather a heritage for thy Son from amongst the human race, and dost maintain the ministry of the gospel, and hast now reformed thy church by means of Luther; we present our ardent supplications that thou wouldst henceforth preserve, fix and impress upon our hearts the doctrines of truth, as Isaiah prayed for his disciples; and that by thy Holy Spirit thou wouldst enflame our minds with a pure devotion, and direct our feet into the paths of holy obedience!’

“ As the removal of illustrious men from the church is frequently a means of punishing their survivors, such of us as are entrusted with the office of tuition, myself personally, and all of us collectively, entreat you to reflect upon the present calamities that threaten the whole earth. Yonder the Turks are advancing, here civil discord threatens, and there other adversaries released at last from the apprehension of Luther's censures, will proceed with a perverse ingenuity, and with increased boldness to corrupt the genuine truth. That God may avert these evils let us be more diligent in the regulation of our lives and studies, always retaining a deep impression of this sentiment in our minds, that as long as we maintain, hear, obey and love the pure doctrines of the gospel, God will always have a church and a dwelling place among us. 'If,' said Jesus Christ, 'a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him.' (s) Encouraged by this ample promise, let us be stimulated to inculcate the truth of heaven, knowing that the church will be the preservation of the human race, and the security of established governments; and let us constantly elevate our minds to that future and eternal state of being, to which God himself calls our attention, who has not given so many witnesses, nor sent his Son into the world in vain, but delights in the communication of these magnificent blessings. Amen."

Melancthon composed, also, the following tributary lines to the memory of Luther:

Occidit omnigena venerandus laude Lutherus
Qui Christum docuit non dubitante fide

(s) JOHN XV. 23.

Ereptum deflet vero hunc ecclesia luctu
 Cujus erat doctor, veriùs, imo pater.
 Occidit Israel præstans auriga Lutherus
 Quem mecum sanus lugeat omnis homo
 Nunc luctumque suum lacrymoso carmine prodat
 Hoc etenim orbatos flere, dolore decet.

LUTHER, illustrious name! is now no more;—
 Let the true church with streaming eyes deplore
 A TEACHER firm in faith—nay, rather say
 A FATHER, from his children snatch'd away.
 Luther is gone—the Pilot of our course:
 O let the tearful Muse his name rehearse—
 Let all the pious join with me to mourn,
 Orphans should thus bedew a Father's urn.

The sympathizing heart will naturally linger upon the affecting consideration of Luther's decease. It was the earthly termination of an uninterrupted and unusual intimacy of nearly TWENTY-EIGHT YEARS with Philip Melancthon. To judge of the survivor's feelings requires either a mind of remarkable sensibility, or the experience of a similar loss. This deprivation of Luther's valuable counsels, and friendly reproofs, of his consoling sympathy amidst the trials of life, and of his directing wisdom amidst the peculiar difficulties incident to the circumstances of the age in which they lived, must have inflicted a deep and lasting pang. Their attachment, founded on principle, was so completely mutual that they were become almost necessary to each other. The agony of separation therefore must have been exquisite ;—

“ O the soft commerce! O the tender ties, Close-twisted with the fibres of the heart!
Which, broken, break them; and drain off the soul
Of human joy; and make it pain to live—
And is it then to live? When such friends part,
'Tis the survivor dies——” (t)

I said it was the earthly termination of their intimacy, for religious friendship can never, never end. If the soul of man be immortal, and if, as seems more than probable, it will carry with it into another world those principles of action, those modes of thinking, those characteristic qualities, which constituted each one's individuality and very being upon earth, then the connexions of time will be perpetuated amidst the raptures of eternity. For though distances and separations are incident to the condition of the present life, it neither comports with our ideas of the benevolence of the Deity, nor with the representations of Scripture, nor indeed with our most ennobling desires and hopes, to suppose these imperfections of our temporal destiny will attach to our future existence. And not only will the recollection of past friendship endear our future intercourse, but the superiority of our celestial character, acquired by a nearer and more constant approach to the source of light and holiness, will infinitely purify it. Friendship founded on just principles arises from the perception of moral excellence, associated with any other striking or attractive qualities, besides a consciousness of some natural similarity of taste or character; it must be allowed therefore that the increase of what constitutes the principle of mutual attraction, will necessarily produce a proportionate increase of attachment. If moral excellence be now esteemed in its present imperfect degree and degraded state, associated as it is with glaring defects, dwarfish in its growth, irregular in its shape and full of infirmity, unquestionably it will prove hereafter in its maturity and glory, a stronger bond of union. And because every principle and faculty is capable of continual improvement, and will hereafter, under happier circumstances, admit of more rapid increase, and more extensive augmentation than at present, the friendship of another world may be considered as everlastingly progressive, and, from the constitution of celestial spirits, indissoluble.

(t) YOUNG's Night Thoughts, 5.

The conduct of Melancthon and Luther to each other, affords an admirable illustration of the true basis of religious friendship. They were not perfectly agreed, but they were perfectly united. Mutual forbearance admitted the free exercise of an independent mind, and secured the rights of conscience and the purity of principle. Societies have been distracted, families divided, and even empires convulsed, from the existence of differences in religious sentiment or practice, far less considerable than those which subsisted between these eminent friends. They knew each other, and did not allow the whirlwinds of a temporary passion to dissipate feelings founded on the best principles, and cherished by an unreserved intercourse. There were many who at different times endeavoured to divide them by fomenting discord, in order to gain their respective influence and authority to some other party or interest: but they were too confident in each other, and too well persuaded of the magnitude of the cause which claimed their mutual co-operation and incessant efforts, to be cajoled into disagreement. If, therefore, our friendships were formed upon more solid principles of union than they frequently are, it is obvious they would prove more satisfactory, more beneficial and more permanent. In all our religious intercourse, it would be wise to aim at securing the essentials of Christianity, rather than to be solicitous of accomplishing what is notoriously impossible, a perfect agreement in points of inferior consideration. The pious Baxter has admirably remarked, “ Were we all bound together by a confession or subscription of the true fundamentals, and those other points that are next to fundamentals only, and there took up our Christianity and unity, yielding to each other a freedom of differing in smaller or more difficult points, or in expressing ourselves in different terms, and so did live peaceably and lovingly together, notwithstanding such differences, as men that all knew the mysteriousness of divinity and the imperfection of their own understandings, and that here we know but in part, and therefore shall most certainly err and differ in part, what a world of mischief might this course prevent? I oft think on the examples of Luther and Melancthon. It was not a few things that they differed in, nor such as would now be accounted small, besides the imperious harshness of Luther’s disposition (as Carolastadius could witness) and yet how sweetly and peaceably and lovingly did they live together, without any breach or disagreement considerable. As Mel. Adamus says of them, ‘ Etsi tempora fuerunt ad distractiones proclivia hominumque levitas dissidiorum cupida tamen cum alter alterius vitia nōsset, nunquam inter eos simultas extitit ex quâ animorum alienatio subsecuta sit;’—so that their agreement arose not hence, that either was free from faults or error, but knowing each other’s faults, they did more easily bear them. Certainly if every difference in judgment in matters of religion should seem intolerable or make a breach in affection, then no two men on earth must live together, or tolerate each other, but every man must resolve to live by himself, for no two on earth but differ in one thing or other, except such as take all their faith upon trust, and explicitly believe nothing at all. God hath not made our judgments all of a complexion no more than our faces, nor our knowledge all of a size any more than our bodies; and methinks they that be not resolved to be any thing in religion, should be afraid of making the articles of their faith so numerous, lest they should shortly become heretics themselves, by disagreeing from themselves; and they should be afraid of making too strict laws for those that differ in judgment in controvertible points, lest they should shortly change their judgments, and so make a rod for their own backs; for how know they, in difficult disputable cases, but within this twelve-months, themselves may be of another mind, except they are resolved never to change for fear of incurring the reproach of novelty and mutability; and then they were best resolve to study no more or ever to be wiser. I would we knew at what age a man must receive this principle against changing his judgment. I am afraid lest at last they should teach it their children, and lest many divines did learn it too young: and if any besides Christ and his apostles must be standard and foundation of our faith, I would we could certainly tell who they are, for I have heard yet of none but the Pope or his general Council expressly lay claim to the prerogative of infallibility, and I think there is few that have appeared more fallible.”(u)

The principal points of difference between Melancthon and Luther were three: 1. Melancthon thought that the ancient form of ecclesiastical government might be retained, on condition of not annulling the authority of Scriptural truth; to which Luther could not assent. 2. Melancthon conceived that Luther carried his doctrine respecting justification by faith only to such an extent as to nullify the importance and obligation of good works, so that his statements required explanation. 3. Melancthon appears to have differed from Luther in his opinion respecting the sacrament particularly in the latter period of his life. He did not believe that the opinions of the Zuinglians ought to occasion a disunion among the Reformers; but Luther was decided upon this point to his dying day. Dr. Maclaine very unnecessarily corrects Dr. Mosheim in his statement of this subject. (x) It is obvious that at first, as Dr. Mosheim represents, "Melancthon adopted the sentiments of Luther in relation to the Eucharist," but in consequence of serious examination, his mind became enlightened, so that he admitted the scriptural idea by degrees, and towards the close of his life in his letters to Calvin, intimates his persuasion of the erroneous and idolatrous nature of the doctrine of consubstantiation. The character of Melancthon has been misunderstood on this as on other occasions. It has been intimated that an unwarrantable timidity prevented his avowing explicitly his opinions respecting the Sacrament. It is true it did arise from his apprehension lest such an avowal should inflame discord and injure the great and general cause of the Reformation. But whether this apprehension were well or ill founded, or whether such a policy were justifiable or unjustifiable (and we are by no means prepared to defend it) such was Melancthon's real principle of action, and not any mean timidity or fear of personal danger or suffering. If this concealment for the sake of peace had really involved him in personal suffering instead of shielding him from it, it is due to the greatness of his character and the conscientious scrupulousness of his mind, to believe he would nevertheless have adhered to it.

(u) BAXTER'S Saints' Everlasting Rest, p. 559. 4to. 2nd Ed.

(x) MOSHEIM Eccles. Hist. Vol. IV. p. 325. Note (r)
8vo. Ed.

It was not from personal considerations only that Melancthon felt the bitterness of his bereavement in the death of Luther; he was sensible of the public loss, and of the great and daily increasing difficulties of his own situation. Political affairs had never yet assumed so alarming an appearance, and they became almost identified with ecclesiastical ones, owing to the conspicuous part which was acted by the most distinguished of the German princes. Though during the past ten years he had been called to take the lead in most of the public transactions relative to religion, having been employed to write every thing that was to be written, and to do almost every thing that was to be done, yet he had constantly profited by his unreserved familiarity with Luther, with whom he consulted and corresponded on every occasion. Now he was required to act in a great measure alone, and in consequence of his rare merit as a divine and a scholar, which had acquired him a high reputation in every country of Europe, he became at once elevated to an undisputed pre-eminence amongst the leading Reformers of the age.

The zealous efforts of Bucer to unite the Swiss and German churches by an agreement on the subject of the Sacrament having been defeated by Luther's determined hostility, his death seemed to furnish a favourable opportunity for the accomplishment of this long-projected reconciliation. Melancthon and his followers were known to be extremely solicitous of this union, and were disposed to go to the utmost length which their consciences would permit to extinguish the flame of discord. The high mutual esteem subsisting between Bucer and John Calvin, the celebrated Pastor and Professor of Divinity at Geneva, appeared to facilitate this design. Anxious to promote Bucer and Melancthon's views, Calvin proposed a mode of explaining the subject, which, while it denied the corporeal presence, allowed a divine virtue and efficacy communicated by Christ with the bread and wine of the Sacrament to those who partook of it with a lively faith and integrity of heart: but he has been generally censured by Protestants for making unwarrantable concessions for the sake of peace. The fair prospect however soon became obscured, in consequence of the occupation of Melancthon in other violent controversies to be mentioned hereafter, which left him no leisure for that co-operation with Calvin which probably might have produced the happiest results; and still more on account of the intemperate zeal of Joachim Westphal, pastor of the church at Hamburg, who both adopted the sentiments and manifested the too-uncharitable spirit of Luther.^(y)

The Pope and the Emperor were now resolved to accomplish the ruin of the Protestants. The Council of Trent decreed, that the Apocryphal writings should be received as of equal authority with the books which the Jews and primitive Christians admitted into the sacred canon, that the traditions of the church should be equally regarded with the doctrines and precepts of the inspired apostles, that the Vulgate translation should be read in the churches, and deemed authentic and canonical: and that all who disputed these truths were anathematized in the name of the Holy Ghost.^(z) By this means they aimed a deadly blow at the very root and principle of Protestantism; and the Pope soon afterwards exhibited a striking proof of his disposition to exterminate it root and branch. Availing himself of the appeal of the canons of Cologne against their Archbishop, he convicted him of heresy, and issued a bull by which he was deprived of his ecclesiastical dignity, and his subjects absolved from their oath of allegiance to him as their prince. There was no reason to doubt the concurrence of the emperor in this sentence, who was maturing the most deep-laid schemes for the subversion of the Protestant faith, under an impenetrable veil of dissimulation. In the month of March he contrived to have an interview with the Landgrave of Hesse, who was more suspicious of his design than any of the other confederates, and he made such professions of attachment to the interests of Germany, and of his dislike to violent measures, stoutly denying that he was engaged in any military preparations, that the Landgrave, cajoled by his plausibility, dismissed his own apprehensions, and quieted the fears of the Smalcaldian confederacy.

^(y) LOSCH. Hist. Motuum P. 2. Lib. III. cap. 8. GREVII Mem. Joach. Westph.

^(z) F. PAUL, 141. PALLAV. 206.

At length public affairs were brought to such a crisis, that the Emperor and the Protestants were at open war. No decisive superiority was acquired on either side during the autumn of 1546; but Maurice Duke of Saxony, and uncle to John Frederic, by an act of perfidy as strange and unnatural as almost any transaction recorded in the annals of history, for the purpose of gratifying a mean and most detestable ambition, invaded the Electoral dominions under the Imperial promises that he should possess them, in consequence of which the Elector was necessitated to retreat homewards. He was eagerly pursued by the Emperor and eventually defeated and taken prisoner, on the twenty-fourth of April, 1547, at Muhlberg on the Elbe. The Landgrave of Hesse was induced by the infamous Maurice to throw himself upon the clemency of the Emperor, under an express stipulation for his liberty, which availed nothing when self-interest and policy dictated another act of imperial treachery.(a)

During the progress of this war the University of Wittemberg suffered a temporary dissolution. In the month of November 1546, the students were dismissed, and Melancthon with his wife and family retired to Zerbst, in the principality of Anhalt the residence of the princes of Anhalt-Zerbst. He was afterwards invited to the offices of Theological and Philosophical professor at Jena, whither some of the princes attempted to collect again the scattered members of the University; but nothing could detach his mind from the beloved scene of his early labours and most endeared associations, and he returned to Wittemberg. His name was a sufficient attraction and recalled the greater part of the fugitives. The lectures recommenced in October, and he successively directed the attention of his students to the Epistle of Paul to the Colossians and to the Proverbs of Solomon.(b) The new-made Elector who had so unworthily usurped his present dignities and

(a) See a full and interesting detail of all these transactions, in ROBERTSON'S History of Charles V. Vol. III. B. 8. and 9. 8vo. Ed.

(b) CHYTRÆI Saxonia, p. 422.

possessions, requested him to repair to Leipsic in 1547, to deliberate upon the constitution of an Academy and the regulation of ecclesiastical affairs, but on many accounts he chose to decline the honour of this invitation. Maurice as a matter of course, fully concurred in the Emperor's proposal at a Diet held at Augsburg, soon after the captivity of John Frederic and the imprisonment of the Landgrave of Hesse, to refer the decision of all religious disputes to the long projected council of Trent. It was also easy for his Imperial Majesty with a formidable army at hand to overawe the majority of the assembly into a similar concurrence. Swords are very powerful arguments, and a man may legislate as he pleases when they are drawn in his defence. The purpose however was not answered. The plague was said to infest the city, the consequence of which was the removal of the council to Bologna, which proved in effect its dissolution. Anxious to devise some method to preserve a religious tranquillity, the politic Charles commanded Julius Pflug, bishop of Naumburg, Michael Sidonius and John Agricola of Eisleben, to draw up a temporary rule of faith and worship for the use of both parties. This was called the INTERIM, because it was professedly appointed only for the period of time which might elapse previous to the assembling of a general council. It contained all the essential doctrines of the church of Rome, though veiled under artful and ambiguous modes of expression.^(c) It was promulgated at Augsburg with the greatest solemnity, and afterwards enforced by the Imperial sword.

The deplorable consequences resulting from this attempt of Charles to legislate for the faith of those whose consciences were proof against the attacks of imperial power, and who resolved like some of the earliest heroes in the same field to obey God rather than men, are thus represented by Melancthon: "Upwards of four hundred pastors in Suevia and the circles of the Rhine are driven from their stations. There is but a single officiating minister at this moment at Tubingen who conforms to the book published at Augsburg; it has had the effect of driving away all the preachers and pastors. It is truly astonishing therefore that Agricola should persist in promising in consequence of this publication another golden age, when it evidently ruins such a multitude of churches, and so many pious and learned men with their families are gone into voluntary exile.”(d)

^(c) Among a variety of other articles the Interim affirms "that works of supererogation are to be commanded; that the church hath the power of interpreting Scripture; that the Pope is head of the church by virtue of the prerogative granted to Peter; that by confirmation and chrism the Holy Ghost is received; that extreme unction is to be administered; that the Sacrament is a sacrifice, and that in it we are to celebrate the memory of saints that they may intercede with God the Father with us and help us by their merits: that we must pray to God for the dead; that in every town and every church two masses a day at least be said, that in country parishes and villages one, especially on holidays; that on Easter Eve and Whitsunday Eve the water in the font be consecrated." SLEID. Hist.

Agricola was liberally rewarded by the Emperor and by Ferdinand ; and Sidonius obtained the bishopric of Mersburg in Saxony. This furnished occasion for a common joke being passed upon them, “that they only defended the Popish Chrism and Oil as being necessary to Salvation, that they might come off the better greased themselves.”(e)

The new and perfidious Elector, notwithstanding his obligations to his equally perfidious patron, hesitated in dubious neutrality respecting the adoption of the Interim until the year 1548, when he assembled the Saxon nobility and clergy at Leipsic to assist him in forming a proper determination. Melancthon attended no fewer than SEVEN conferences upon this subject, and wrote all the pieces that were presented as well as the censures which were passed upon the different divisions of that imperial creed.(f)

This was a very critical period in his life.

(d) PEZEL. Consil. Theol. p. 87.

(e) SLEIDAN.

(f) ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theol.

It will be necessary to examine it with attention and to dwell upon it with some minuteness of detail, in order to afford the reader ample materials for the due appreciation of his character. Not only was Melancthon perpetually exposed to the vilest calumny, but all his conduct and words were misrepresented to the Emperor and plots were laid against his life. The fury of party was raging to cut him off at a stroke, but he was preserved amidst the danger and survived the tempest. The Emperor even sent to summon him into his immediate presence, but Maurice himself became his advocate and protector.(g)

The divines of Wittemberg and Leipsic assembled upon the subject of the Interim successively at Begy, Zell, and Juterbock, whither Agricola was sent by the Elector of Brandenburg to meet them. The result of these deliberations was the publication of a book written by Melancthon, and of a decree founded upon it respecting the observance of things of an indifferent nature. The Emperor being anxious to enforce his own creed, and Maurice though a Protestant, not to displease him to whom he had been so highly indebted, consulted the Protestant leaders, especially Melancthon, respecting the extent to which concessions might be made with a safe conscience, in order to avoid the extremes of servility and violent opposition. In reviewing the Interim it was thought this conciliating medium might be discovered in the omission of some practices and opinions, while the essentials of Christianity were retained. The volume referred to, contained a particular statement of such articles.

(g) CAM. Vit. Mel. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

As this publication and the Adiaphoristic Controversy(h) resulting from it became a fruitful source of the most envenomed disputes, in which Melancthon was represented as having abandoned the truth through excessive timidity or servile compliance, and as ecclesiastical writers have by their representations perpetuated this unfavourable impression to the present hour, it is incumbent on a faithful biographer either candidly to avow the fatal blemish, or by an impartial examination of authentic documents to remove these false impressions, if the aspersed character be indeed capable of vindication. The reader will admit that the first and most direct means of ascertaining the fact, is an appeal to Melancthon's own reply to the Interim: we shall therefore extract its statements on those topics in particular which occasioned the clamours of his most violent adversaries; and they will prove amply sufficient to furnish his defence.

(h) From the Greek word ἀδιαφορος, which signifies indifferent. Hence Melancthon and his followers were called Adiaphorists.

“ If we deny and persecute acknowledged truth we blaspheme God, an unpardonable sin, from which we pray that he would graciously defend us. And although threatened with war and destruction, we must still adhere to the word of God and not deny acknowledged truth. As to the danger incurred by the defence of what is preached in our churches and we know to be truth, we will entrust the affair to God.

“ As the articles in the Interim are various, some right and some wrong, some in which all pious persons concur and some otherwise, we will plainly avow our convictions, not rejecting what is true out of caprice or violence, nor allowing what is obviously erroneous.

“ The first three articles respecting the Creation and fall of man, original sin and the redemption of the world through Jesus Christ we fully admit; but to the fourth on justification we object: because it states that a man is justified or made righteous by the exercise of love as a work, a sentiment which is afterwards repeated, for a man is righteous before God and pleases him for the sake of Christ and through faith in his name. And though the Emperor’s publication states in some places that a man becomes righteous through faith; the meaning evidently is, that faith is a preparation of the heart beforehand, and that afterwards a man is rendered righteous by the work of love. It asserts also the obnoxious principle that there may be true faith although a man live with an evil conscience and have no love, and that love constitutes a meritorious title to eternal life. So that according to these representations a man is justified and pleases God by his own works, a doctrine long ago taught by monks and friars. The truth is, although we must possess love and a good conscience, yet we are justified before God or please him through our Saviour and Redeemer Jesus Christ, FOR HIS SAKE ALONE and through faith in him, but by no means on account of our own merit or virtue.

“ At the same time we diligently teach the necessity of deep repentance, sincere love and a good conscience, because ‘ he that loveth not abideth in death.’ But we must cleave to Jesus the Mediator and seek the communication of every grace through him, for ‘ in thy sight,’ to adopt the language of the Psalmist, ‘ can no man living be justified ;’ and again, ‘ for thy name’s sake O Lord pardon mine iniquities.’ When in our necessities we supplicate the Throne of Grace, it becomes us to be humbled under a sense of our misery and our guilt, and to implore consolation through him who is our Great Peace-maker. ‘ Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

“ To prove that this is the original and immutable principle in the church of God in all ages St. Paul refers to the example of Abraham declaring that ‘ Abraham believed God and it was counted unto him for righteousness ;’ that is, although Abraham was distinguished for his great and eminent virtues, yet his righteousness before God whom he pleased, consisted in his faith in the promises which were graciously vouchsafed to him.

“ There are many points relative to the order and power of the bishops which we cannot but oppose—but as these remarks are general and the language is often ambiguous, we advise our most gracious prince not to animadvert much upon this article. The church is a congregation or assembly of persons who possess real faith in Christ, and no man ought to separate himself from the true church : but the question is who compose it?—Separation from the church is charged upon us as a crime of the greatest magnitude ; but if the adversaries of truth continue obstinate and thus occasion discord and debate, surely they are guilty before God and not the poor and pious souls who receive or preach it. ‘ If,’ says Paul, ‘ an angel from heaven preach any other gospel let him be accursed,'—but there exist at the present moment many grievous errors and abuses under the authority of the Roman Pontiff, which even the book of the Interim itself has denounced, but which the councils of Trent and Bonony have advocated. If the bishops would induce us to obey them it must be upon this condition, that they do not persecute the truth nor re-establish impious ceremonies. God has graciously explained his mind and will in his Scriptures: THESE WE MUST HEAR AND RECEIVE, and not as in worldly kingdoms be made to submit to the expositions of some one man who is empowered to give them at his own pleasure.

“ Our churches practise those ceremonies which conduce to good order, and if any person imagine there is any thing in such indifferent things which with the good advice of those who regulate the church appears calculated to promote uniformity or good order we will readily assist, for on this subject we will not contend. We are indifferent whether men eat flesh or fish. As to prayers and hymns addressed to departed saints, I have before said they are inadmissible; the same may be said of processions of the Sacrament. It is also well known to our adversaries that private masses, invocation of saints and the procession with other practices, if they might admit of some excuse or extenuation, are however both needless and dangerous, and the re-establishment of them in our churches will strengthen the monstrous errors and abuses of our adversaries; and they know also that that offence will deeply grieve many pious men and occasion much persecution, proscription, imprisonment and perhaps the murder of priests and others.

“ Let the potentates and rulers consider amidst the alarms of war now prevalent, what they will and what they ought to do in this affair for the defence of the church. AS FOR MYSELF, I AM READY BY THE GRACE OF GOD TO DEPART HENCE, AND IF NEED BE, TO SUFFER.

“ We have been lately written to and admonished not to preach, teach or write against this Interim, but necessity compels us to say thus much with all humility of mind, that we will not alter in what we have hitherto taught in our churches; for NO CREATURE POSSESSES POWER OR AUTHORITY TO CHANGE THE WORD OF GOD, and it is at every one's peril to deny or forsake the known truth. As therefore this Interim is opposed in many of its articles to the truth we have advocated, we feel it necessary to publish in a Christian spirit an explicit answer; the danger incurred by this measure we cheerfully face, committing all to the eternal God the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. And as of his infinite goodness he has gathered to himself a church in these realms, by means which surpass the wisdom and thoughts of all men, we earnestly pray that he will always uphold, preserve and place it under a good and righteous superintendency.”

This performance was translated into English as soon as it issued from the German press by one John Rogers, and as it is a curious piece of antiquity we insert the translator's preface entire. It is not only amusing, but elucidatory of the present subject.

“ To the Reader,(i)

“ Because I with great grieffe have nowe often heard (most dere Reader) that the highly learned and no lesse godly, jentle and loving man Phillip Melancthon is highlye belyed, in that a great sorte openlye saye that he hath denyed the trueth or (that I maye use their owne wordes) recanted; (whiche thyng they saye onely to

(i) The original edition of this book is in the BRITISH MUSEUM. It is entitled, “ A waying and considering of the INTERIM, by the honour-worthy and highly learned Philip Melancthon—translated into Englyshe by John Rogers, 1548.” This worthy advocate of Melancthon is considered by Mr. Lewis, in his History of the Translation of the Bible into English, as probably the translators as well as publisher of that edition of the Bible which was issued under the name of Thomas Matthews in 1537 with the King's licence. Rogers was afterwards burnt for printing that Bible in the Reign of Queen Mary.

hyndre the furtherance of God's trueth), I coulde do no lesse but turne into our Englyshe speache and also put out this litle treatise of his: not so muche for the defence of his moste named and knowen fames sake, (which he hath yet hitherto kepte undefiled, so that even the greatest enemyes of the gospell neither coulde nor have saied otherwise of hym) as for the confortyng of many godly and Christen hertes, whiche have bene not alytell dismayed and discouraged thorow suche lyes. And verely not without a cause, for his denyng would do more harme to the trueth in these last and most perelouse tymes than any tongue or penne can expresse. And God of his goodnesse, bountefull mercye and great power, graunt that that never chaunce. At this tyme also thankes be to God therefore, he hath not onely not denyed the trueth but also after his olde accustomed Christen manier, plainely confessed and acknowledged it: whiche thyng this his answer to the Interim, ynough witnesseth.

“ And although this his writing be shorte and answer not to al the poyntes of the Interim, (for that would aske great labour and long tyme) yet it playnely answereth to the greetest misuses, and to the very senowes of the Rome-bushops moste tyrannouse kyngdome contayned in that boke.

“ He also sheweth tokens ynoughe in the booke that he will at leasure and largelier write upon manye poyntes thereof. I received also a letter with this treatise from a nother godly and learned man, wherein is writen that other and divers learned men in Dutchlande be in hand to shewe their meaning in writing as touchyng the same, so that we may be of mucche better comforte then our Papistes would gladly se, yea then manye of the good and faithfull be, that that Interim will be wstanded and not so sone and easely receaved as the Papistes hope and many Christen feare. This I saie chiefelye caused me to putte out this litle boke at this time.

“ But for that there be haply many that know not what that Interim meaneth, for some have not seen and some have nott harde of it, ye and the moste understande not the worde, as they that understand no Latine, or not very well, neede dryveth me to shewe bothe what it is and also the meanyng of the worde. Interim is a booke whiche was at the Emperowres Maiesties commandement prynted and put forth about the begynnyng of June, in this yere of our Saviours birthe 1548, wherein is commanded that al the cities in Dutchlande that have receaved the worde of God, and made a change of ceremonies accordyng to the word shal reforme their churches agayne, and turne to the olde Popishe ordinaunces as a dog dothe to that he hathe spued out, or a washen swyne to the myre.

“ Thus have ye harde what it is. Now heare what the word signifyeth or betokeneth.

“ Interim is as muche to saye, as in the meane season or in the meane while. And therefore have they christened the childe and geven him this name because they wyll that we kepe all the thynges commanded and contayned in that booke, in the meane while from this highedutche parlament holden at Augsburg till there be a generall councill holden. There they thynke (but God sitteth above in heaven and thynketh haply otherwyse) to make that matter worsse. For because it had been an hastye worcke to have chaunged all thynges at once, they of their great (I had almost sayed) grevouse and mercillesse mercy have borne with us in two thynges, that is to saye, in the Maryage of Priestes and receyving of the communion in both the kindes. But how long forsoth?—Interim, that is in the meane while till the generall councill come. And thynke then to beare no longer with us, no nor with Christe himselfe, for then they thynke to be so strong, that neyther Christe himselfe nor all that wyll abyde by hym shall be able to withstande them. This is the meanyng of the worde in Englyshe.

“ Unto this Interim and meaning thereof hathe thabove named Phil. Melancthon answered and written this present treatise, and sheweth to what thinges a Christen man maye agre and which thynges may be chaunged and whiche not; in whiche treatise the reader shal well perceave that he nether hath denied the trueth that he hath thus longe taught and acknowledged, nor yet thinketh to do: whiche vertu and high gyfte of God, the Almighty Father of our Lord Jesus Christ increase in him and all the Christen to the honour and glory of his holy name, increase of his knowledge and saving of many soules.—Amen. At London, in Edward Whitchurch House, by John Rogers, 1. Augusti, 1548.”

The affair of the Interim occupied the attention of several conventions in the year 1549, and Melancthon devoted a considerable share of his time, not only in these attendances, but in writing letters of advice respecting indifferent things to the pastors of the various churches in Hamburg, Frankfort, Mansfield, and the various districts of Upper and Lower Saxony. These interesting documents uniformly breathe the same pious and pacific spirit, mingled with their author's characteristic prudence. To the former of these churches he very distinctly states his sentiments respecting what are denominated indifferent things. “We do not call magical consecrations, worshipping of images, the procession of the host and other similar services openly condemned both in our discourses and writings, nor such absurdities, as nocturnal visits to the tombs of saints, indifferent things: but they are shockingly multiplied either for the purpose of provoking us, or with a crafty design to impose heavier burdens upon the pastors, and they do us an injury while they humour their own passions. There are many things appointed by the most ancient of churches, and conducive to the beauty of orderly worship and the instruction of the lower classes, as the order of festivals and of lessons, public assemblings, examination and absolution previous to the reception of the sacrament, certain rites in public penitence, examination in confirming, public ordination to the ministry of the gospel, public betrothing to marriage, the form of prayers used in nuptial ceremonies, and funeral orations over the dead." (k)

One of the first and most virulent of all the opponents of Melancthon at this period was Matthias Flacius, or Flaccus Illyricus. He was a native of Albona in Istria, and in the year 1541 he went to Wittemberg, where he became a disciple of Luther and Melancthon, and afterwards taught Greek and Hebrew for a subsistence. He was treated with the utmost kindness and liberality by Melancthon, and in 1544, (k) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 79. Comp. ep. 80, 81, 82. ad Past. Eccles. in Marchiá, in Comitatu Mansfeldensi, in urb. Francof. ad ripas Meni.

through his and Luther's influence, he obtained a public employment in the University. During the period of dispersion which the scholars suffered in consequence of the war, he resided at Brunswick, and delivered lectures which acquired him considerable reputation, but afterwards returned to Wittemberg in 1547. When the controversies arose respecting the Interim, he retired to Magdeburg, which was at that time put under the ban of the Empire. He is represented as a man of excellent talents, great wit and extensive learning, but turbulent, furious, and of a most contentious disposition. (l)

Flacius at first ventured only upon the private circulation of some sarcastic misrepresentations of the meetings of the divines of Wittemberg; but afterwards he openly slandered them, although he had no certain information of the subjects of their conferences. Melancthon was blamably negligent of his private papers, and would often confess it to his friends, particularly Camerarius, who remonstrated with him upon the subject. Flacius by this means surrepticiously obtained possession of copies of several of his letters and other writings, and considering himself sufficiently armed for a more public attack, he first united himself with some of Me-lancthon's bitterest enemies, Gallus, Amsdorff, Wigand, Judex, Faber and others: then published at Magdeburg a variety of slanders against him and all his party, advising every one to avoid them as the very pests of the church. He had the audacity to proclaim himself as "the only true prophet, teacher and defender of the religious interests of the Christian community, and admonished every one to observe the evil consequences resulting from their secret assemblies and conferences—that now there was an end to all pure religion—that gospel liberty was betrayed—that they were returned to the once rejected yoke of Papal domination—and that the poor flock of Christ was recommended again to the mitred bishops." To prove these charges he published a copy of the decree of Leipsic, and other minor writings which had been proposed to the states, and compared these with the book of the Interim. He distorted every sentence, and by artful misrepresentations endeavoured to persuade every one that the different articles of the decree contained the most deadly poison. In addition to this he declared, "that the forms of the church ought to be constantly maintained inviolate, without allowing the smallest alteration according to the appointments of the Interim, and that if the Emperor or the Papists should molest any one, it would be proper to resort to arms for defence."

(l) BAYLE Dict. Hist. CAM. Vit. Mel. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

After some time Melancthon, having patiently borne every*reproach, wrote a reply to these statements, which merits insertion, not only on account of the excellent spirit which pervades it, but because it effectually refutes the misrepresentations of Mosheim and his learned commentator. It is dignified, pious and solid.

“As it ought to be every one’s principal concern to know and worship God aright, and as he has revealed himself in his church, inviting all to hear his voice and to fly to the standard of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is represented by Isaiah as “set up for a standard to the people,” (m)—it is of the utmost importance amidst this general confusion of mankind, wisely to consider and to inquire what constitutes the true church, and where it is to be found; that wherever we are we may form a part of it by adopting the principles of the true faith, and connecting ourselves with the people of God. This church is dispersed throughout the world, but is distinguishable from the impious part of mankind by infallible signs; for such as maintain the truth of the gospel, and the proper use of the sacraments, to the rejection of idolatrous services, constitute, wherever situated, the true church of God, and may be satisfactorily distinguished from others by their reception of THE SCRIPTURES.

(m) Is. xlix. 22.

“ Amidst the wreck of empires and the dispersion of their subjects, good men possess this consolation, that wherever they hear the incorruptible word of truth, and witness the legitimate use of sacraments, the rejection of idolatry, and of those errors which oppose the commands of Jesus Christ, there they feel confident of having discovered the true church, there is the family of God, there he is present by the ministry of the gospel, there the supplications of faith are heard, there the genuine worship of God is conducted, and there the Son of God gathers an eternal inheritance. ‘ Where two or three,’ said he, ‘ are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.’ (n)

“ In periods of public dissension we have need of these consoling sentiments, and I have introduced them here, because our churches, which know the importance of these considerations, are at this moment exceedingly disturbed by numerous clamours. The same doctrine is taught in them as is proclaimed in our writings: the Sacraments continue unaltered: errors in faith and images in worship, as our books sufficiently testify, are discarded.

“ But Flacius Illyricus exclaims that our

(n) MAT. xviii. 20.

doctrine is changed, and that we have restored certain ceremonies which had been abolished. Let us examine these charges; and first, concerning Doctrine. The instructions of all the public teachers in our churches and seminaries at once refute this calumny, and to avoid any prolix statement let me refer to what I have written in the volume entitled, ‘Loci Communes Theologici,’ which is in many hands, and in which I did not aim to establish a new faith, but accurately to represent that which was common to all our churches, as exhibited in the Confession of Augsburg, presented in 1530 to the Emperor, which I consider the invariable sentiments of the true universal church of Christ; a statement I wish to be understood as having written without sophism, and without any calumnious intention. I am conscious of having compiled that epitome of doctrine, not for the purpose of seeking to differ from others, not from the mere love of novelty, not from a desire of controversy, nor from any other base or unworthy motive: but circumstances required it. When in the first inspection of the churches we had to encounter a variety of reproaches from ignorant persons, I published in a compressed form a summary of Doctrine which Luther had delivered in volumes of discourses and expositions, and studied a mode of expression which might conduce to accuracy of views in those who were taught, and to general unanimity; always submitting what was written to the judgment of our churches, and of Luther himself, whose opinions on many points I particularly inquired, and copies of whose writings are in the possession of many. I now call God to witness my profession of this doctrine, which, as I have already stated, I am satisfied perfectly coincides with that of the universal church of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by his assistance I resolve to bring this confession into general use in the church. This I mention lest any one should reproach me for hindering the faith of others by my own doubts.

“ In the next place it is requisite to offer a few words of reply to the charge respecting Ceremonies. I certainly could have wished, especially in the present afflictive circumstances, that the churches should not have been disturbed by any change, but if such be the case it does not originate with me. But I confess that I have persuaded the people of Franconia and others not to abandon their churches on account of any service with which they could comply without impiety. For although Flacius cries out vehemently that the churches had better be deserted, and the Princes alarmed by the fear of sedition, I should not choose to be the author of such wretched advice. It is plain that we must endure much greater burdens in the cause of literature and religion than mere dress—as the hatred of the great, the insolent contempt of the populace, the malevolence of hypocritical friends, the dissensions of the priesthood, poverty, persecution, and other evils which accompany even a quiet government: but these turbulent times produce many greater miseries.

“ But as we must not desert our posts on this account, we may sustain lighter servitude if it can be done with a good conscience. The distressing situation of the present times, in which there are such divisions in sentiment and affection, seem to me to require that these oppressed churches should be comforted and strengthened by all the aids that piety can afford, and that we should take care that the most important doctrines should be faithfully explained and transmitted to posterity, and that the Universities be supported as the depositories of general literature.

“ The representation of Flacius respecting somebody (who I know not) having reported, that I have declared we ought not to withdraw from the churches although the ancient abuses should be re-instated, is absolutely false.

“ Now mark this crafty man; in order to excite suspicion and inflame hatred, he produces many sentences dropped in familiar discourse, which he calumniously misinterprets, and also attributes sayings to others of his own invention, that he might appear not only to have witnesses, but agents at his command. Nor have I ever thought or said what he falsely imputes to me, that we ought to remain in those churches in which old errors are restored, mass invocation of saints, and other impious services which we have condemned in our publications. I do openly declare that such idolatrous rites should neither be practised nor endured: and that students may be the better instructed in every particular, I have explained the occasions and origin of controversy with great care and labour.

“ Here if I were inclined to indulge my grief I might justly complain of Flacius, who circulates such falsehoods to my detriment, and might detail the origin of those distresses which overwhelm the whole church, explaining those circumstances which tend to strengthen the boldness and confirm the power of our adversaries against the truth. But I am unwilling to open these wounds, and I beseech these advocates of liberty to allow me and others at least to endure our afflictions in peace, and not excite more cruel dissensions.

“ He boasts that he will be the advocate of the pristine state of things. If by this expression he refers to particular empires and governments, and confines the church only to its own walls, his idea is very incorrect; for the church is scattered abroad in various kingdoms, publishing the incorruptible word of the gospel, and serving God by the tears and groans of genuine worship. But as he states he was once so familiarly acquainted with me, he could testify my pains and sorrows and zealous care. We lament the disturbed state of public affairs and of kingdoms, nor do we ask for garrisons and ramparts of defence, but in our churches we publish the gospel of truth, serving God in the knowledge and faith of his Son, and aiming to the best of our feeble efforts to promote the literary pursuits of our youth and the preservation of discipline. If this advocate of the primitive state of things can restore this golden age to our churches, let him triumph as much as he will.

“ Why he should particularly attack me who have never offended him as Marius did Antonius, I know not, for he is aware that I have been always opposed to the corruptions of religion and have censured the prevailing errors. Now he says I have encouraged them, because it has been my advice not to quit the churches on account of a surplice or any thing of that kind. If dissension arises on these subjects, the commandments respecting charity should not be forgotten, especially as he knows our great afflictions, and that we neither seek dominion nor wealth. We should not imitate the example of wordly disputants whose impetuosity is often such as to exemplify the proverb, 'One serpent eats another lest it should become a dragon.' He now not only threatens to write against me, but to do something worse. I could wish that we rather co-operated to illustrate essential truth, for there are sources enow of contention; so that we should renounce our hostility and labour, a mode of proceeding more conducive to our personal advantage and that of the whole church, lest it should happen as Paul says, 'take heed that ye do not devour one another.' I shall frame my answers with a view to utility, and hope, that both by my writings and by the opinion of the pious I am sufficiently defended against calumny. Many good and learned men in different places are greatly grieved that the churches are so unjustly censured. But I recommend Flacius and others to consider, what will be the consequence if mutual animosities revive the quarrels of thirty years. How deplorable would this be!

“ Whenever he reports his idle stories and things professedly spoken in familiar conversations, he shews what kind of regard he has for the confidence of friendship and the rights of social intercourse. We naturally unbosom ourselves with more freedom amongst our friends, and often I have myself in maintaining a discussion strongly opposed an opinion which I really embraced, not in joke, but for the purpose of obtaining information from the views of others.

“ Many are acquainted with my natural turn of mind, and that I am prone rather to indulge in jocoseness even in the midst of afflictions than to any thing like sternness. To catch and circulate my words on these occasions as he has done is mean and unkind, to say no worse. But if, as in some parts of his letter he threatens me with the sword, any evil should occur, and destruction should befall this poor head, I will commend myself to Jesus Christ the Son of God, our Lord, who was crucified for us and raised again, who is the searcher of hearts and knows that I have inquired after truth with a careful simplicity of mind, not wishing either to gain factions and influence, or to indulge an unbridled curiosity. Nor has it been without great and diligent attention to the whole of Christian antiquity, that I have endeavoured to unravel a variety of intricate questions and to direct the studies of youth to important learning.

“ But I will not speak of myself. In all civil dissensions I am aware that calamities are to be expected, the minds of men become inflamed, and I perceive Flacius prepared with his firebrands; but to God I commit my life and his own true church here and in other places, respecting which I feel far more solicitous than of my own life. This however is my consolation, that God has promised his perpetual presence in the church, and his Son declares, ‘Lo ! I am with you always even to the end of the world.’ He will preserve the people that maintain the doctrines of the gospel and that truly call upon his name ; and I pray with the utmost fervour and importunity of soul that he would preserve his church in these regions.

“ This brief reply to the clamours of Flacius, I have written, not so much on my own account as for the sake of our churches in general, among whom many pious minds are deeply wounded by his writings. Let them be consoled by this assurance, that fundamental principles are faithfully retained in our churches, namely, the incorruptible ministry of the gospel, all the articles of faith and the use of Christian Sacraments without alteration. The Son of God it is most certain is present with such a ministry, and as I have already said, hears the supplications of such an assembly. Adieu, candid reader. October, 1549.”

It will be proper to subjoin to this defence the emphatic language he uses in an epistle to his friend Matthesius—“ I trust you will not be influenced by the sycophantic writings of Flacius Illyricus, who invents absolute falsehoods. I have never said, I have never written, I have never thought what he declares I have said, respecting the phrase 'we are justified by faith only;' namely, that it is absurd and a kind of subtle trifling about words—I have indeed spoken and written many things respecting the manner in which the exclusive term is to be understood as well as many others; and have been at great pains to correct the misinterpretations of many put upon the word only; but I purpose replying to these virulent criminations."^(o)

If in corresponding with his friends Melancthon spoke of Flacius in very decided terms as a calumniator, we cannot feel much surprised; but that the flagrant misrepresentations of this adversary, should have so deeply tintured as they have done the accounts of distinguished historians is truly deplorable. Even Mosheim and his commentator have obviously leaned to the unfavourable side of the subject, and rather perpetuated dishonourable impressions than carefully guarded his fame. The language of this great Reformer which has been copiously quoted in the present work, is in itself sufficient to evince the nature of those principles by which he was actuated and the extreme absurdity of charging him with tergiversation.

(o) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. II. 42. ad Johan. Matth.

The Adiaphoristic Controversy occasioned many other disputes, but we shall neither perplex our readers nor mispend our time by wandering into the briery wilderness of polemical divinity. To some of these debates, however, it will be proper briefly to allude in relating the events of the time in which they were particularly agitated.

CHAP. XII.

A. D. 1550, to A. D. 1557.

Articles prepared for the Council of Trent—Melancthon commences his journey thither—but returns in consequence of Maurice changing his conduct, and declaring war against the Emperor—Peace of Passau—Plague—Withdrawment of the University of Wittemberg to Torgau—Osiander—Stancarus—Private afflictions—Meeting at Naumburg respecting the renewal of the ancient Friendship subsisting between the Houses of Saxony, Brandenburg and Hesse—Transactions relative to Servetus—John Frederic's Release and Death—Death of Maurice—Controversies—Persecutions of Flacius and his Adherents—Melancthon's letters on the subject—Death of Jonas.

IN the year 1550, in consequence of the importunate entreaties of the Emperor, Pope Julius III. who had succeeded the departed Paul III. appointed a Council to be held at Trent; and in the Diet of Augsburg all the German Princes, overawed by the military attitude and resolute spirit of his Imperial Majesty, consented to this convention. The Elector Maurice was the least servile of any in this compliance, insisting upon these conditions, which however the Archbishop of Mentz refused to enter in the registers, that doctrinal points should be re-examined and discussed—that this examination should be conducted in the presence of the Protestant divines—that they should have the liberty of voting as well as deliberating—and that the Pope should not preside in the proposed council either in person or by his legates. Deeming it requisite to be fully prepared for the great occasion, Maurice commanded Melancthon to draw up an explicit statement of the principal articles of the Protestant faith, to be presented if required to the proposed council. A similar paper was written by Brentius in the name of the Wurtemburghers, and is called the Confession of Wurtemberg. When the former document was ready, the prince convened all the Theologians at Leipsic on the eighth of July 1551, to hear it read and to deliberate upon its contents. It was unanimously approved and published in Latin and German in 1552 under the title of “Repetitio Augustanæ Confessionis, sive ut dicitur Confessio doctrinæ Saxonicarum ecclesiarum, Synodo tridentino oblata, anno 1551, in quâ, christiane lector, videbis, quinam et Catholicæ Ecclesiæ gremio resilierint, et per quos stet, quominus ecclesiæ pia concordia sanciat, 1552.” This, which is called the Saxonic Confession, was received by the churches of Pomerania and Strasburg.

In the month of January of the succeeding year Melancthon began his journey to Trent. “Yesterday,” says he, writing to George, Prince of Anhalt, “I received letters from the Court containing the commands of our illustrious Elector, to George Major and myself to proceed to Nuremberg, where we are to wait further orders respecting our journey to the general council, the Duke of Wurtemberg and the city of Strasburg having already sent their deputies. But as no particular instructions are given, I propose proceeding direct to Dresden whence I will write to your Highness. I sincerely wish the Court would not disregard the advice which is approved by so many, that a general commission be sent by common consent to the council from the principal churches in the neighbouring cities and districts. But I commend our cause to God.” They were, however directed to proceed only as far as Augsburg, till they received further instructions from Prince Maurice for their future guidance. With this design they travelled to Nuremberg, where in consequence of the high esteem in which Melancthon was held, they were received with the most marked distinction. They were lodged in a public building of the city and every attention paid them which the most affectionate and solicitous benevolence could dictate. "The day after our arrival at Nuremberg," says Melancthon, "which was on the twenty-second of January, I received a packet of letters sent by Doctor Padornus, from the city of Trent, in which it was intimated that the answer to the application, for a (Papal) safe conduct was still delayed. I wrote immediately that we were come to Nuremberg, and requested to be informed whether and when we were to proceed to Trent. I have also notified our journey to our own Court. At present I have received no reply from either. We have been already delayed ten days at Nuremberg, in total uncertainty respecting our future progress, whether or when we are to go forward. In the mean time many in this place distinguish us by the most officious kindness and attention. Sarcerius preaches publicly to great concourses of people and I have delivered several lectures."

During this delay public affairs assumed such a posture as not only to stop the progress of Melancthon and his associates, but to place Germany in a new and interesting situation. The time was at length arrived when the secret motives which influenced the newly-created Elector of Saxony to a mysteriousness of conduct which had often perplexed and astonished the Protestants, were at length fully developed. From the intimacy to which the Emperor had admitted him he soon perceived his design of becoming the absolute dictator of Germany, and every act convinced Maurice that he was secretly rivetting on the chains of servitude, which his ambition had forged for his degraded country. He had frequently petitioned for the release of the Landgrave of Hesse from imprisonment; to petitions he added remonstrances; but nothing could induce Charles to fulfil his engagements. Maurice was aware at the same time, that he was elevated to a commanding ascendancy among the Protestant princes, and the fairest prospects presented themselves for the gratification of his own eagerness for power and distinction. With the most consummate address he succeeded in retaining the fatal confidence of the Emperor while he deceived him, and in not losing entirely that of the Protestants, while he was necessitated in public to pursue a course which they must have often considered dangerous to their religion, if not subversive of their liberties. At length he prepared to strike the blow, by soliciting the protection of Henry II. King of France, who agreed to declare war against the Emperor, professedly for the sole purpose of emancipating the Landgrave of Hesse, as a Catholic prince could not unite with a Protestant association upon a religious account. Application was also made to the King of England, but the cabals incident to a Court during a minority (it was the reign of Edward VI.) prevented that attention to foreign and especially to religious affairs, which might otherwise have been expected. A last application for the liberty of the captive Landgrave was made in vain; Maurice still cajoled the Emperor, affected to be more than ever anxious to remove the difficulties which had arisen respecting a safe conduct to the Protestant divines, and as we have seen, even commanded Melancthon to proceed on his journey to the council of Trent. He further intimated his intention of meeting his Imperial Majesty in person at Inspruck. Many rumours were beginning to circulate, but the Emperor and his confidential adviser Granvelle, Bishop of Arras, totally disregarded them; the sagacious minister and his Imperial Master being both lulled into a fatal security.

At length Maurice took up arms and published a manifesto, in which he represented that the defence of the Protestant religion, the liberties of Germany and the release of the Landgrave of Hesse from unjust imprisonment, were the principal motives of his conduct. The council of Trent was instantly prorogued for two years, but circumstances prevented its actually re-assembling for the space of ten. It is impossible not to perceive in the infatuation of Charles V. and his advisers, and the political manœuvres resulting from the ambitious views and private resentments of the Elector Maurice, that superintending Providence, which, though it permitted a sea of troubles to flow in upon the Protestant cause, and almost to inundate the territories of religious Reformation for a time, appointed the happy moment when the tide should ebb and Germany be free.

Melancthon in this extraordinary crisis willingly returned to Wittemberg, to resume his various duties both of a private and public nature. The city which had so welcomed his arrival, rendered him every honour upon his departure. "It would have been a very proper procedure," says he, writing to the Prince of Anhalt, "to have sent a general deputation from various churches to the council as your Highness thought from the very first, but our advice on this subject, as your Highness knows, was afterwards disregarded. When therefore none of the princes or cities sent deputies, and no commands were given us except by the Elector of Saxony, I felt I confess, the strongest disinclination to the journey; and when we could not proceed any further, I returned most willingly under the guidance of Providence to Wittemberg, although I was very much persuaded to remain in the country. Aware, indeed, that there were many unwise and evil-minded persons at Trent, I would nevertheless have gone had Germany continued in a state of tranquillity. Now distress forces me to return, or rather I judge it a very unseasonable period to be disputing concerning Pontifical authority in a council amidst the alarms of civil war.”(p)

The unprepared state of Charles and the vigorous activity of Maurice, combined with a variety of more private reasons which influenced the different powers of Germany, to produce the peace concluded in the month of August at Passau ; in which, among other articles, it was stipulated that a Diet should be held within six months to deliberate concerning the most effectual method of preventing in future all disputes in religion ; that in the mean time neither the Emperor nor any other prince should upon any pretext whatever offer injury or violence to such as adhered to the Confession of Augsburg, but allow them the free and undisturbed exercise of their religion ; that the formulary of faith called the Interim should be considered null and void ; and that if the proposed Diet should not be able to terminate religious disputes, the present stipulations in behalf of the Protestants shall continue in full force and vigour. (q)

(p) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. II. p. 247.

(q) RECUEIL DES TRAITES, II. 261.

Amidst the desolations of war, Germany was destined also to suffer the ravages of the plague, in consequence of which the Universities of Wittemberg and Leipsic were dispersed; but the former re-assembled under the auspices of Melancthon at Torgau, about twenty-two miles distant. He there engaged in delivering lectures on Justin Martyr, prepared a treatise "de unione personali," which does not appear to have been ever committed to the press, and published a refutation of Osiander in the German language. He used to say that "he was not afraid of the plague which had driven them to Torgau, but he was really apprehensive on account of plagues of another kind, which infested the country and seemed to threaten its utter ruin."

Osiander was another of those virulent adversaries of Melancthon, which the conferences and publications on the subject of the Interim had produced. He was pastor of the church at Nuremberg, but retired on that occasion to a divinity professorship at Konigsberg. His character and his opinions were marked by eccentricity. He zealously propagated sentiments respecting repentance and justification, which differed essentially from the Lutheran doctrines, and consisted in subtle distinctions which it is needless to detail. Suffice it to remark, that Stancarus, professor of Hebrew at Konigsberg undertook to refute his statements, but was hurried by his impetuosity into opposite extremes of doctrine. Osiander maintained that the man Christ, as a moral agent was obliged to obey for himself the divine law, and therefore could not by the imputation of his obedience obtain righteousness or justification for others. Hence he inferred that the Saviour of the world was empowered by his nature as God, to make expiation for our sins and reconcile us to the offended Deity. But Stancarus totally excluded Christ's divine nature from all concern in the satisfaction he made and in the redemption he procured, affirming that the office of Mediator between God and man belonged to Jesus in his human nature alone. Osiander was patronized by persons of considerable rank and influence, but his opinions did not long survive him.^(r)

These discussions engaged the attention of the most eminent of the Lutheran divines and moved the powerful pen of Melancthon. In the year 1553, he says in a letter to his friend Camerarius, "I have written on the controversy of Stancarus in a manner by far inferior and more concise than the magnitude of the subject requires, but I was not willing to irritate an angry and choleric man." To Matthesius he writes, "About eight days ago the Elector of Brandenburg sent for Pomeranus and myself to examine into the controversy of Stancarus, who contends that Christ is Mediator only in his human nature. But immediately afterwards, information arrived the Elector's son was dead and his father ill; and thus at present our journey and the examination are postponed. Nevertheless I have written my solemn declaration, that Jesus Christ is to be viewed as Mediator, as he is our High Priest in his united natures, divine and human. St. Ambrose maintains the same sentiment. The principal arguments for this truth I purpose sending at a future time. I beg you to notice for me any evidences on this subject which you may discover in reading the ancient fathers."

(r) SCHLUSSELB. Cat. Hæret. Lib. VI. BAYLE Dict. Art. Osiander, Stancarus. MOSH. Eccles. Hist. Vol. IV.

His reply to Stancarus exhibits a mind in search of truth, and maintaining that dignified and unruffled tranquillity which a consciousness of possessing it ought ever to inspire. He begins in a pious and conciliatory manner, deprecating all animosity in religious parties, and stating that as great contentions frequently originate in small beginnings, it was his anxious desire to remove rather than to enflame contention. He appeals most convincingly to every part of the New Testament, in proof of the impossibility of separating the two natures of Christ in the Mediatorial transactions, because the Son of God in his entire nature became Mediator, Redeemer, Saviour, King and Priest of the church. He appeals also to the concurrent opinions of Chrysostom, Irenæus, Ambrose, Jerome and the fathers generally, upon the same subjects.(s)

Melancthon was at this period occupied with the care of the churches and academical establishments in Misnia. To him as the most competent director in every concern of this description, applications were usually made; and the very counsellors of princes were the first to seek his valuable advice. His plans were in this as in most other cases adopted.(t)

His affectionate spirit was deeply grieved by the loss of several friends during the course of the year, and by trials in his family. “Domestic afflictions,” says he,(u) “are superadded to others. My servant John, remarkable for his fidelity and virtue, is called from the present life to the heavenly church; and now my wife is so extremely ill that nature seems overpowered by disease. But I pray the Son of God to grant us his presence and preserve us with his whole church, as I have often expressed it in the following verse:—

“Te maneat semper servante Ecclesia Christe Insertosque ipsi nos tua dextra tegat;

(s) MELANCTH. Op. Tom. I.

(t) CAM. Vit. Mel.

(u) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. II. 77. ad Joh. Matthes.

Tres velut in flamma testes Babylonide servas Rex ubi præsentem te videt esse Deum.”

O Saviour, may thy church unhurt remain,
And all within thy kind protection share!
Like Israel's sons amidst Chaldean flame—
The king confessing that a God was there!—

A conference being appointed in the month of March 1554, at Naumburg, in Thuringia, for the purpose of consolidating a union and renewing the ancient friendship that subsisted between the houses of Saxony, Brandenburg and Hesse; the different Theologians with Melancthon at the head of them were summoned to attend. John Foster, a skilful Hebraist, accompanied him from Wittemberg; Alexander Aless, to whom he was peculiarly attached on account of his excellent spirit, polemical knowledge and accurate discernment, was deputed to join them from the University of Leipsic; Adam Craft, from Hesse, and John Sleidan, celebrated for his history of ecclesiastical affairs, from Strasburg. From this convention he writes to Camerarius, “ Like the ancient Argonauts who stuck fast upon a quicksand, so I seem to be fixed amongst the numerous perplexities of this troublesome affair. When we arrived at the Court we were directed to give our opinion upon three things, the inspection of the churches and the preparation of a formulary, as they call it, of instruction—the constitution of councils—and concerning the affairs of the Academy in Misnia. Afterwards when no one had prepared a copy of such instructions as were required, I received orders to compose it, which though done upon the spur of the occasion, was read in the assembly the next day and approved. The pastor commented upon some things respecting your council; about the new Academy I have given no advice. The pastor made some observations in a very free, ingenuous manner. The third day was consumed in contention with the Dean of Friburg, who attacked in the severest terms the good old pastor respecting the Adiaphoristic Controversy. I have written a reply which is incorporated in the letters of the prince to the Duke of Prussia, who is aiming to prevent the circulation of every book that contains any thing upon the subject of the Baltic Controversy.”

The purpose of this meeting was at length accomplished, in the renewal of that ancient treaty which subsisted between the two Electors of Saxony and Brandenburg, and the Landgrave of Hesse; and the insertion of another article which the peculiar circumstances of the times suggested, by which the respective parties agreed to adhere to the Confession of Augsburg, and to maintain it in their dominions. (x)

Impartiality here demands a statement of the opinion of Melancthon upon those transactions at Geneva respecting the unhappy SERVETUS, which have occasioned so many violent controversies. Were we to enter into a deliberate and dispassionate investigation of this affair, it would probably appear that an eagerness to criminate on the one hand, and to defend on the other, has hurried each party into extremes; the one, whose opinions have coincided with those of Servetus, have not been sufficiently disposed to make allowances for the peculiar circumstances in which the Reformers were placed, and for the strength of those conscientious however erroneous—deplorably erroneous principles which they blended with many valuable discoveries;—the other party cherishing opposite religious sentiments, have been too anxious to extenuate a crime committed against the rights of conscience which no considerations can excuse; absurdly imagining that Calvin and truth were identical, and that to defend the reputation of the former was essential to the vindication and glory of the latter.

The case was this. Michael Servetus, a Spaniard and a native of Villaneuva, in Arragon, (x) CHYTR. Saxon. 480.

embraced the reformed religion at an early period of his life, in consequence of searching the Scriptures; but departed from the general sentiments of the Reformers on the subject of the Trinity. His zeal was considerable, and going into Germany to propagate his opinions, he published a book in 1531, entitled "de Trinitatis Erroribus," which in the ensuing year was followed by two other treatises. These writings occasioning great dissatisfaction, he removed from place to place till he settled in Paris, where he devoted himself to the study of medicine, but at the same time became involved in disputes of a theological nature with the physicians, till at length chagrined at the suppression, by act of parliament, of a book he had published, he withdrew to Lyons and was introduced to the Archbishop of Vienna, in whose house he long resided. During several years he corresponded with Calvin the Reformer of Geneva, but the contemptuous manner in which he treated his theological antagonist, produced at length an open rupture and a mortal antipathy. When Servetus was arrested and committed to prison at Vienna for his publications, together with his printer, Calvin, at the desire however of the magistrates of that city, sent his letters and writings—but he was condemned for his published errors, and not as it appears in consequence of any interference of the Genevan Reformer. Having escaped from prison he fled to Geneva with the design of retiring to Naples. Here he was arrested; and, as it cannot with probability be denied, at the instigation of Calvin, who had long before intimated “if that heretic came to Geneva, he would take care that he should be capitally punished.”

When tried for heresy the principal accusations against Servetus were, his having asserted that the land of Canaan was fertile, though it was unfruitful and barren—his having corrupted the Latin Bible which he was employed to correct at Lyons, by introducing trifling and impious notes of his own—and having in the person of Calvin defamed the doctrine that is preached, uttering all imaginable injurious and blasphemous words against it. Before sentence was passed, the ministers of Basle, Zurich, Bern and Schaffhausen were consulted, who unanimously determined that he ought to be condemned to death for blasphemy and heresy. The following verdict was accordingly pronounced—“You Michael Servetus are condemned to be bound and led to Champel, and there fastened to a stake and burned alive with your book written with your hand and printed, until your body shall be reduced to ashes and your days thus finished as an example to others who might commit the same things; and we command you our lieutenant to put this our sentence into execution." Thus he perished in great agonies on the twenty-seventh of October 1553.

The reader must naturally feel curious to know the opinion of the amiable Melancthon on this odious transaction, and it is with the utmost pain we produce it, as expressed in a letter to Bullinger. "I have read your statement respecting the blasphemy of Servetus, and praise your piety and judgment; and am persuaded that the Council of Geneva has done right in putting to death this obstinate man, who would never have ceased his blasphemies. I am astonished that any one can be found to disapprove of this proceeding; but I have transmitted you a few papers which will sufficiently explain our sentiments." On more than one occasion he had refuted his statements by an appeal to Scriptural evidence, (y) and had he confined his hostility to the principle, and not by his concurrence have punished the man, we should have enjoyed the delightful opportunity of presenting to the reader, a noble exception to the general spirit of the times. But at that period, Christians of every class and party believed that gross religious errors were punishable by the civil magistrate, a popish doctrine which they had not yet renounced, and which, it is to be feared, is not even to this day, and in the most enlightened part of the world, totally exterminated from the breasts of all Protestants. Be it remembered however, that by cherishing such a principle in any degree they betray the best of causes—furnish occasion for the most injurious representations of Christianity, and instead of learning of their master, who was “meek and lowly of heart,” imitate the misguided disciples who were for calling down fire from heaven. Can any thing be more obvious than this, that it is the birthright of every human being to think for himself, that he is amenable alone to conscience and to God for his religious sentiments, and that whatever person or system attempts to legislate for the free-born soul, and coerce the faith of another, is perpetrating one of the most detestable of crimes, robbing man of his liberty and God of his authority? In such a case submission to MAN is treason against HEAVEN. Is it not truly astonishing that while the Reformers in their separation from the church of Rome asserted this noble principle, and were daily contending and even bleeding for it, they should so far forget themselves, even the very best of them, as to act in diametrical opposition to their own claims — to impose and to dissent from the same principle at the same time—to discard human authority in matters of religion in contending against the Romish hierarchy, and to vindicate it in establishing their own church?—So inconsistent is human nature!—But let Protestants aim to purify themselves from this deep stain upon their characters, which can only be removed by eternally disclaiming not only in words, but in practice, all dominion over another's faith and conscience!

(y) MELANCTH. Ep. Lib. I. 3. Lib. IV. 140. &c.

JOHN FREDERIC survived to the present year the release from imprisonment which the peace of Passau had given him. He had however only been permitted to take possession of a part of his territories, and although he had laid claim to his electoral dominions upon the death of Maurice, who was shot in battle in the preceding year, that usurper's brother, Augustus, a Prince of considerable talents and great urbanity of manners, was chosen by the ungrateful states of Saxony to that elevated station. The death of John Frederic excited the tears of Melancthon, who ceased not to admire the virtues which not only flourished in the beams of prosperity, but which did not appear in the least degree to wither in the most adverse season of his life. He possessed an inflexible integrity of character that no changes could possibly alter, and a far distant posterity will venerate his name.

The contentions excited by the intemperate zeal of Osiander and Flacius now raged in every direction, and with such excessive violence at Nuremberg in particular, that the whole city was in a state of commotion. A most urgent application therefore was made to the Elector Augustus, to permit Melancthon, whose advice had been often sought, to repair immediately with his principal associates Aless, Camerarius, and Pomeranus to afford every requisite assistance on the spot. The most disgraceful scenes were transacted, (z) but the presence and judgment of these eminent commissioners after some time restored tranquillity. Melancthon drew up a short but comprehensive statement of truth, in which he displayed the most exquisite skill, combined with the most Christian spirit. He maintained truth and refuted error without indulging in the least asperity of language against his adversaries.

This affair however, was not adjusted till the commencement of another year; but upon his return home he was infested with crowds of persons inoculated with the wildfire of Flacius, who absolutely persecuted him for several months and years. Unhappily several persons of distinction espoused his cause, and encouraged the ignorant hostility of the vulgar. They cherished a disputative pertinacity of spirit, made a man an offender for a word, perpetually stood in the attitude of defiance, filled all the shops with the most abusive publications, and denounced with unmerciful scurrility the amiable and insulted Melancthon. Flacius himself was the prime mover of these proceedings, and exerted a never-ceasing activity in the circulation of calumnious misrepresentations. In a letter to Matthesius, Melancthon very justly characterizes him as "a viper whose venom every wise man would avoid;" but the calumniator himself he addressed in the mildest terms. "Homer, in describing the contest between Ajax and Hector, represents the former as being satisfied when the latter yields and confesses that he is vanquished; but there is no end to your criminations. Who ever acts in this manner? Who strikes a foe when he gives up the contest and throws away his weapons? Claim the victory, I yield, I contend no longer about these rites; I am chiefly solicitous that the churches live in concord and peace. I confess indeed that I have committed sin in this affair, and implore forgiveness of God that I did not wholly fly from these subtle disputations: but I feel myself obliged to refute the mistatements of yourself and Gallus." (a)

(z) “Exarseruntque passim certamina de illis rebus planè gladiatoria. Quæ tanta extiterunt Norimbergæ ut ferri in civitate pacata diutiùs non possent.” CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 341.

On another occasion he expresses himself

(a) PEZEL. Cons. Theol. Tom. II. pp. 255, 257.

in the following manner; “ I am not in despair on account of the cruel clamour of my enemies, who threaten not to leave me a foot of ground to stand upon in Germany; but I commit myself to the Son of God. If I am driven away alone, I have determined to go into Palestine, and in those lurking places where Jerome retired, by maintaining intercourse with the Son of God, to write clear statements of divine truth, and in death to recommend my soul to God.” Again he says, “ I am eagerly and with tranquillity of mind expecting to be banished, as I have told the princes. My adversaries declare they are resolved to accomplish their purpose, and that I shall not have a footing in Germany. I sincerely wish they would do it quickly, as the Son of God said to Judas. If I die, there will be a footing for me in heaven; or if I continue in the body, I shall still be associated with pious and learned men either in Germany or elsewhere. I am astonished at the folly of my enemies, who imagine they possess a ruling influence in Germany, and can terrify me with their threats.”

On Melancthon in a great measure devolved “ the care of all the churches;” but will any one credit the representations of his open enemies, or more injurious friends who have carelessly propagated the notion of his abandoning, the truth, after perusing the following pious and affectionate portion of a letter addressed to the pastors of the churches in the provinces of Bohemia and Lusatia?—or, indeed, will it be believed that if he had been guilty of tergiversation they would have continued too seek his advice, to value his sympathies, to confide in his wisdom, and to allow him to maintain the eminence to which public esteem and personal merit had exalted him? “Whether,” he observes, “divine wisdom has appointed still greater troubles than ever existed before in this feeble and superannuated age of the world, may be doubtful; but amidst the desolation of Empires, the Son of God will continue to gather an eternal church, solely by the preaching of his gospel, till the period when he will recal the dead to life. These predictions are given to encourage us to endure the sufferings allotted us, and to persevere in the labour of extending the truth in the world, which will not be in vain. It is with much grief we have heard that pure doctrine is so despised, that the pastors have been driven from their churches, and that at this moment many pious and upright men, with their wives and dear little children, are in a state of exile. We sympathize most deeply with them with you and with your bereaved churches, and implore the Son of God, who has said, ‘I will not leave you comfortless,’ to alleviate these sufferings, and to afford you all necessary assistance. You so well know the true sources of religious consolation, that we will not enlarge, but only admonish you under present circumstances to set your churches an example of steadfastness in tribulation, lest they should be tempted to unbelief. Nothing will be more efficacious for this purpose than a thorough knowledge of the truth, and an opposition to mere human opinions. The Papists support the most flagrant idolatry, the invocation of departed saints, and numerous absurdities originating from that monstrous sentiment: they turn the Lord's Supper into a gainful traffic, and contrary to the design of this institution, carry about the bread in public procession to be adored. Disparaging the true doctrine of repentance, they invent a multiplicity of foolish rites, to the absolute torment of pious persons, taking away the consolation to be derived from the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and zealously contending for numerous observances of their own invention. The people then will not surely suppose our determined opposition to these practices unnecessary. Let the principal points of doctrine be frequently inculcated, with these solemn admonitions; 'Keep yourselves from idols.'—'Though we or an angel from heaven preach any other gospel unto you, than that which we have preached unto you let him be accursed.'—'Whosoever blasphemeth against the Holy Ghost, it shall not be forgiven him," This letter is dated February, 1555. (b)

The death of Justus Jonas proved an additional source of affliction at this period. He had been particularly intimate both with Luther and Melancthon, and had co-operated with the latter in several important public transactions. Jonas was a native of Northausen in Thuringia. He was profoundly skilled both in law and theology. For some years he held a pastoral charge at Wittenberg, and was a professor and Rector of the University. Afterwards removing to Halle, he became extensively useful in promoting the Reformation. For a considerable time after the death of Luther he continued in the Duke of Saxony's court, and was a sympathizing companion to the sons of John Frederic in their afflictions. At last he was placed over the church in Eisfield, where he expired in peace on the ninth of October, 1555, at the age of sixty-two.

Maximilian king of Bohemia levied a new tax upon the celebrity of Melancthon, by proposing to him a number of questions respecting the principal subjects that occasioned the controversies of the age; to all of which he felt himself obliged to return a circumstantial reply.

This was in the year 1556, and the whole memorial was published at Leipsic, by Nicholas Selnecker, about ten years after the author's decease.

It is impossible for those who are not similarly situated fully to realize the perplexity and toil which Melancthon and his coadjutors sustained at this period. As the head of all the principal literary and ecclesiastical transactions of the age, consulted by princes, despatched upon every urgent occasion on different journies, summoned to private conferences and public councils, necessitated to maintain an extensive correspondence, opposed, and even insulted by a violent faction, and watched as a heretic by the partizans of the Roman hierarchy, it is not surprising that he should represent himself as tormented upon the rack of incessant engagement, and absolutely distracted with writing disputations, rules and regulations, prefaces and letters.(c)

(c) “ Non poëticæ carnificinæ apud inferos pares sunt meæ carnificinæ, quâ excrucior scribendis disputationibus, legibus, præfationibus, epistolis. Nunc respondeo optimo inveni τῷ ἔχοντι ἔννομα ὑιῶ δετῆ τῆ σκιπίωνος, et volumen mitto. Heri in Pomeraniam Controversiæ Stetinensis disjudicationem misimus.” ad Joach. Camerarium, 844.

CHAP. XIII.

A. D. 1557, TO A. D. 1560.

Last conference of Melancthon with the Papists at Worms—Visit to Heidelberg—Receives intelligence of his wife's death—Her epitaph—The Chronicon and other writings—Loss of friends—Melancthon's infirmities—Interesting paper assigning reasons why it is desirable to leave the world—A variety of particulars respecting his LAST ILLNESS AND DEATH—Epitaph by Theodore Beza—Ode—Conclusion.

THE time was now approaching when this distinguished combatant was to pass from the field of holy and honourable warfare in which he had so long "fought a good fight," to share the honours of an eternal triumph. In the year 1557, he met his Popish adversaries for the last time in a conference at Worms. The chief subject of dispute was a most important one, meriting all the zeal and firmness with which the Reformers maintained their principles. It respected the rule of judgment in religious concerns.

This the Papists strenuously affirmed to be the universal consent or custom of the church; and with no less ardour Melancthon and his coadjutors insisted that the only legitimate and authoritative rule was THE SACRED SCRIPTURE. Let it never be forgotten by a grateful posterity, that however they might differ in some other points among themselves, and however widely present or future generations may differ from them in topics, either maintained by some of them individually or perhaps all of them collectively, they are to be applauded and venerated for holding with the most tenacious grasp of mind and asserting with the utmost resolution of spirit in defiance of a persecuting world, this noble principle—this anchora sacra of the Reformation, that THE ONLY AUTHORITY TO WHICH HUMAN REASON OUGHT IMPLICITLY TO SUBMIT IN RELIGIOUS CONCERNS IS THE INFALLIBLE WORD OF THE LIVING GOD!

From the conference at Worms during a temporary suspension of the business, the Elector Palatine sent for Melancthon to Heidelberg, for the purpose of adjusting some literary arrangements—the Augustinian convent having been converted into an academy. In this affair he was assisted by Micyllus and other eminent scholars. The pleasure he felt in meeting his brother George at Heidelberg, and in the affectionate attentions of his celebrated son-in-law

Caspar Peucer, was painfully interrupted by the intelligence of his wife's death. His friend Joachim Camerarius was charged to convey the melancholy tidings. Knowing the strength of his affections, he chose to defer the performance of this sad duty till the day after his arrival, when they walked together in the prince's garden ; but instead of manifesting any extraordinary emotion, Melancthon on receiving the intelligence spoke like a man who was weaned in a great degree from the world, uttering a kind of tender farewell to his beloved Catharine, and adding " that he expected very soon to follow her." He pursued a solemn and pious strain of conversation, expressing his prophetic anticipations of the future troubles that awaited Saxony. So firmly convinced was he of the reality of his apprehensions, and so deeply affected at the dark prospect of future calamitous years, that his domestic misfortune seemed utterly absorbed in the greater importance of public affairs. (d)

The last act of conjugal tenderness which closed the long union of thirty-seven years, was the composition of the few following lines to adorn the tombstone of his deceased wife :—

Proximus hic tumulus Catharinæ contegit ossa
 Quæ Crappo quondam consule nata fuit

(d) CAM, Vit. Mcl.

Conjugio casto fuerat quæ nupta Philippo
 Ex scriptis cujus nomina nota manent.
 Virtutes habuit donatas numine Christi Matronæ Paulus quas docet esse decus.
 Hic absente viro sepelivit filia corpus
 Vivit, conspectu mens fruiturque Dei.

Deposited beneath this hallow'd earth
 Lies CATHARINE'S dust, of CRAPPIN'S house by birth ;
 To PHILIP join'd by wedlock's sacred name—
 Philip—whose writings will prolong their fame.
 Virtues which Christ bestow'd adorn'd her life,
 And such as Paul affirms become a wife.
 Her Philip absent, mourn'd the chast'ning rod—
 By filial tenderness beneath this clod
 Her BODY'S plac'd ;—her SOUL is fled to God!

Melancthon survived his beloved partner only about two years and six months, a period which he occupied in an unremitting attention to the duties of his academical station, and in the composition of useful works. His opponents would not allow him to retire from controversial writing, and in 1558 he replied to the accusations of Staphylus and Avius, two of the zealots of Rome.

In the same year he issued the first part of his CHRONICON, which is published complete in the fifth volume of his works by Peucer. It consists of more than seventy pages in folio, containing the great events of general history from the creation of the world to the period of the Reformation. Like all his other compositions it displays a great extent of reading, a remarkable capacity for judicious selection, and a disposition to use up the rich materials with which his mind was stored, in the erection of a structure, adapted both to gratify and to benefit posterity. The Chronicon was written principally as its author states for the youth in the Universities; "I wish," says he, modestly, "I possessed more time and capacity to finish up these historical narratives, but I hope that others will be stimulated by this example to execute other more copious and better compositions."

Many writers have erroneously attributed to Melancthon a Greek Version of the Augsburg Confession, transmitted in the course of the following year, under the name of Paul Dolsci, to the patriarch of Constantinople. His own words in a letter to Bordingus sufficiently evince the mistake of this statement, while they authenticate and approve the Version. "I send you a Greek Version of the Augsburg Confession, which was published without my advice. However I approve the style and have sent it to Constantinople by a man of learning, a dean of that city, who has been our guest during the whole summer. He relates that there were heretofore many churches in Asia, in Thrace and the neighbouring countries, but they have been gradually diminished by oppression and bondage." During the same year he composed his reply to a Decree of the Abbot of Wurtemberg, and to some papistical scurrilities of which he grievously complains; (e) he wrote also his judgment upon the controversy respecting the Lord's Supper to Frederic III. Elector Palatine, which was afterwards published; and finished some other minor compositions.

During these transactions his earthly ties were gradually dissolving. Year after year robbed him of his dearest friends, thus rendering the world less desirable, and heaven more attractive. On these occasions he usually expressed himself in a pious and elevated strain. For instance, "Let us congratulate Vitus, now removed to the delightful society of the heavenly church; and be stimulated by his example to prepare for the same journey." In addition to his domestic and other bereavements he lost Micyllus, Justus Menius and John Bugenhagen Pomeranus. The latter was one of the most remarkable men of the age, and may be justly ranked with Luther and Melancthon, with whom he cherished a long and close friendship, and to whom he was in many respects little inferior. Originally he was a schoolmaster at Treptow, in Pomerania, and when he first saw the “Babylonish Captivity” by Luther, exclaimed, “the author of this book is the most pestilent heretic that ever infested the church of Christ;” but after examining it more seriously and with an inquisitive mind, it wrought so entire a change of sentiment, that he said “the whole world is blind and this man alone sees the truth.” When he was chosen to be minister of the great church at Wittenberg, he not only did not aim at this elevation, but was almost dragged by force out of his obscurity to possess it, and assiduously devoted himself to the duties of this eminent station during thirty-six years. He expired in peace on the twentieth of April 1558, at the advanced age of seventy-three.

(e) MELANCTH. Ep. Tom. II. p. 379. ad Cracovium.

It is some satisfaction to find that such a man as Philip Melancthon was not destined to spend the latter years of his life in a state of inanimate decrepitude and half-conscious being. The flame of his genius and piety burnt with a bright and steady lustre to the last; the noon of fame seemed to shed its undeparted glories upon the evening of his earthly existence! How many have lived only to be pitied or despised, the wreck of their former selves, alike incapable of receiving or imparting either pleasure or benefit! Decays of body and infirmities of mind have worm-eaten a fabric built of the finest materials, and once presenting to the gratified observer a happy combination of elegance and utility. But in the present instance every thing excites surprize and veneration. A perfect maturity of the faculties and a singular capability of exertion are apparent to the very end of his days. Pulchrum etiam autumnus pulcher est. It is impossible to read some of his last letters without emotion. They breathe an exalted piety, a spirit of sympathy with the sorrows of others, and a state of preparation for that mighty change he was soon to experience. Such is his letter to Everard Roggius. (f)

“ Dearest Brother,

“ I am a father and not insensible or destitute of natural affection, but deeply sympathize in the calamities which befall sons and daughters. I cannot therefore but believe that you are painfully affected with yours; for the strongest mutual affection is implanted in the human breast between parents and children. I pray that our Lord Jesus Christ may assuage your griefs, alleviate your adversities, and preserve both you and your family. Resort to those divine sources of knowledge which are bestowed upon us, to administer consolation in trouble. God designs indeed that his church should suffer the cross, but he would not have us be overwhelmed with grief, but rather stimulated by afflictions, to call upon his name, to acquiesce, to rejoice in his dispensations. You remember the language of the Prophet Isaiah, whose words are expressively rendered in the Septuagint Ἐν θλίψει μικρᾷ ἡ παιδεία σου ἡμῶν. It is said to be a little or short affliction, because all the joys and sorrows of the present life are hasting to a termination. Let us then contemplate and be constantly preparing for the everlasting society of the blessed God! Farewell, the sixteenth of October, the day on which one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one years ago Demosthenes died, whom one cannot but lament for having consumed such a vigour of genius in such a useless manner and as being σκεῦος ὀργῆς a vessel of wrath. Let us be grateful to God who has called us to nobler pursuits, and implore his Son so to rule and guide us that we may be σκέπη ἐλέους vessels of mercy.

(f) MELANCTH. Ep. p. 307, 8, Lugd. Batav. 1647.

“ From your brother, now an old man and not far from his climacteric year 63,

“ PHILIP MELANCTHON.”

His last letter chiefly because it is the last he wrote, we have thought proper to translate. It is addressed to John Aurifaber.(g)

(g) MELANCTH. Epist. p. 430. Lugd. Batav. 1647.

“ Reverend Sir and dearest Brother,

“ Although I heard that you were in the principality of Breslau, where I indulge the hope of enjoying some intercourse with those learned and pious men Crato, Adam, Peter Vincentius and Moreburgius, yet I write these few lines though I am in excruciating pain from an intermitting fever, originating in a catarrh which has troubled me for upwards of three years. You will pardon therefore the brevity of my letter. Feeling myself dying, I have commended your doctrine to the illustrious prince, and have written concerning the genuine and holy union of the principal churches. I commend also this doctrine to you and implore you to receive David Voyt with kindness. I trust he will not disagree with you in opinion. Let me intreat you, if I live, to write me soon. Farewell, I return you my thanks for every kind office, and in particular for your assistance in the case of Sickius and Daucis.

“ Philip Melancthon will soon be no more!”

About the same time he wrote down in two columns on a piece of paper, the reasons why it is desirable to leave the world. One of these columns contained the blessings which death would procure; namely, first, that you will come to the light—secondly, that you will see God—thirdly, that you will contemplate the Son of God—fourthly, that you will understand those admirable mysteries which you could not comprehend in the present life—fifthly, that you will know why we are created such as we are—sixthly, that you will comprehend the union of the two natures in Jesus Christ. The second column assigned two reasons for not regretting a departure from the world—first, because you will sin no more—secondly, because you will no longer be exposed to the vexations of controversy, and the rage of Theologians. The following is an exact copy.(h)

A Sinistris.

Discedes à peccatis Liberaberis ab ærumnis et à rabie Theologorum.

A Dextris.

Venies in lucem
Videbis Deum
Intueberis filium Dei Disces illa mira arcana quæ in hæc vitâ intelligere non potuisti:
Cur sic simus conditi
Qualis sit copulatio duarum naturarum in Christo.

It appears from the testimony of the professors at Wittemberg, in their narrative of his death,⁽ⁱ⁾ that Melancthon frequently intimated his conviction that he should not survive his sixty-third year; and a few months previous to his decease he wrote the following distich in anticipation of the approaching event:

(h) MEL. ADAM. Vit. Philosophorum.

Sic ego quotidie de lecto surgo precando
Ut mens ad mortem sit duce læta Deo.

The last journey he performed was to Leipzig, on the sixth of April, for the purpose of attending the annual examination of the Students of Divinity, who were supported by the munificence of the Elector; from which service he returned on the ninth. Although the season was inclement, he appeared to feel no inconvenience on his way thither, but while there he was suddenly seized during dinner with the windy choleric and diarrhœa, but the symptoms quickly disappeared. Upon his return he complained of the severity of the north wind, and the cold humidity of the atmosphere, which, he said, he had not felt so much during the whole winter:

(i) The interesting little volume referred to was published in the name of all the professors, and is entitled "BREVIS NARRATIO exponens quo fine vitam in terris suam clausurit Rev. Vir D. Philippus Melancthon, unà cum præcedentium proximè dierum et totius morbi quo confectus est brevi descriptione, conscripta à PROFESSORIBUS ACADEMIÆ WITTEBERGENSIS, qui omnibus quæ exponuntur interfuerunt. Express. Wit. A. 1560.

and the motion of the carriage had made him painfully sensible of the calculus which had been forming in his kidneys during several years. The night of the seventh of April was the first in which his last fatal disorder manifested itself. He was restless from want of sleep, and became afflicted by a considerable and general debility. His cough was extremely troublesome, and the fever which eventually terminated his days began to attack him.

About six o'clock in the morning his son-in-law, Dr. Peucer, came to see him, and immediately intimated the great alarm he felt at the situation of his father. It was determined instantly to send the melancholy information of his danger to the friend of his heart Joachim Camerarius, with whom he had lived in the closest friendship for upwards of forty years.

After this he wrote several letters, and used the medical remedies which his son-in-law prescribed. Having been some time silent he at length exclaimed, "If such be the will of God, I can willingly die, and I beseech him to grant me a joyful dismissal;" alluding to the song of Simeon, "Now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." He dwelt upon the word peace, and prayed for such a removal.

At nine, the usual hour for the commencement of his public duties in the Academy, he rose from his seat, and began to prepare for going down to deliver a Lecture on Logic, which exercise he thought he could endure for half an hour, if he afterwards used the bath; and he felt unwilling to desist from his public labours. When he was about to set his foot upon a little stool which he was accustomed to make use of when he washed his hands, his weakness was such that he almost fell upon his knees by the effort, which occasioning some bustle—"Ah," said he, "my lamp is almost out." Some of his friends thought it would be expedient to prevent the attendance of the students by issuing private orders to them not to fill up their places, in order that when Melancthon went to lecture, he might be induced to return, and relinquish the idea of persevering; but he appeared so anxious that it was believed this proceeding would be likely to produce a worse effect, by agitating his mind, than the exertion itself; he was therefore allowed on this and some following days to attend in his place.

The lecture which he delivered was upon a sentence of Gregory Nazianzen, εις τό αγιον παχα λυτρων του κατεσχοτος; and upon a passage of Isaiah, κατεχει κατεχομεθα μεν γαρ υπο τς πονηρας, &c. but his weakness rendered it impossible for him to occupy more than a quarter of an hour. Upon his return home he went into the warm bath, and after taking his dinner slept very soundly for three hours, and was so revived that a hope was entertained of his recovery. He employed himself before supper in writing, but his debility afterwards returning, the pleasing hopes that had been cherished were annihilated.

He did not yet desist from any of his usual employments, and after this period continued to dictate in the second part of his Chronicon.

On the tenth of April he appeared to be totally free from his former disease, but was attacked by a semitertian fever or ague. A quantity of bile being soon expelled from his stomach by the use of medicine, he seemed relieved. Though it was of considerable importance that he should be kept quiet, yet such was his ardour that, having discovered that the Senate of the University was convened at the hour of twelve, he could not be dissuaded from attending what he believed to be his public duty. As several disputes arose, he spoke with great zeal on each subject, for the purpose of promoting peace and reconciliation.

Although extremely debilitated, yet on the morning of the eleventh of the month he rose early, and at six, as usual on festival days, delivered a lecture on the last prayer of the Saviour, recorded in the seventeenth chapter of the Gospel of John. He divided the prayer of Christ into three parts, as embracing so many distinct objects: namely, 1. That a Church might exist in the world. II. That it might be distinguished by its unity and concord. III. That his people might be heirs of that salvation and eternal life which belongs to the heavenly church. A few days previous to this he had entreated his hearers to remember after his decease some passage or passages to which he particularly directed their attention in this last prayer; and after repeating the above division, he said impressively, "I am a dying man, and these are the three subjects for intercession with God which I leave to my children and their little ones—that they may form a part of his church and worship him aright—that they may be one in him, and live in harmony with each other—and that they may be fellow-heirs, of eternal life!"

On the twelfth of April, 1560, he delivered his final lecture on the words of the prophet Isaiah, "Who hath believed our report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?" (k) On the same day he wrote the following lines, which are obviously but the commencement of a hymn which his weakness rendered him incapable of finishing.

Æterno genitore nato Christe
 Orator patris ex sinu verendi
 Vocem Evangelii ferens suavem
 Qua credentibus exhibes potenter

Vitam justiciamque sempiternam
 Et qui sanguine nos tuo redemptos
 Exaudis, reputas facisque justos
 Ostendisque piis tuum parentem
 Nostras Christe semper doceto mentes
 Ac in pectora gratiæ arrabonem
 Nostra effundito Spiritum moventem Casta incendia et invocationem:
 Fac pars agminis ut tui per omne
 Ævum simus, alacriterque semper
 Æterni Patris et tuas sonemus
 Laudes——

The worthy Professors of Wittemberg relate with great seriousness, that between nine and ten the same night several persons of credibility affirmed, that they saw in the air some remarkable appearances of rods and scourges; upon which Melancthon, who is known to have been addicted to superstitious apprehensions, and to have been deeply impressed with the expectation of approaching calamities to his country, remarked, “ That they were evidently ominous of impending punishments; but as it was rods, such as those with which parents correct their children, and not swords they saw, they might expect paternal chastisements, and not those destructive ones which were inflicted upon enemies.” (1)

(1) BREVIS NARRATIO à Professor. Acad. Witteb. p. 16.

During the night he enjoyed a comfortable repose, and was heard to chaunt in his sleep in the manner in which the same words were usually repeated in public, "With desire have I desired to eat this passover with you before I suffer." (m) He rose at three in the morning, and applied himself to complete his Chronicon. But from this period he rapidly declined: still anxious however to persevere to the last in the assiduous discharge of his Academical duties, two days afterwards, on the fourteenth of the same month, he would have attempted to deliver another public lecture, had he not been prevented by the urgent persuasions of his friend Camerarius, who came from Leipsic to pay him all the attention which affectionate friendship could dictate.

He even put on his Professor's gown, and would have crept to the lecture-room to have delivered a discourse which he meditated on some portion of the Evangelical history, but being informed by his son-in-law that the students were not assembled, he desisted from his purpose. The fact was, after having crowded to hear him they were dispersed by a proclamation which his friends, unknown to himself, had affixed to the door, stating his incapacity to attend.

His mind was in a very cheerful state, and he often betrayed his characteristic humour. (n) He spoke of death with composure, and of his friend Pomeranus, who had died about two years before. He said that he dreaded nothing so much as becoming a useless cumberer of the ground, and prayed that if his life were protracted, he might be serviceable to the youth under his care, and to the Church of Jesus Christ.

On the fifteenth he conversed much with Camerarius on the language of Paul, which he appropriated; "I have a desire to depart, and to be with Christ." He criticised upon the Greek terms, which, he said, ought to be rendered, "Having a desire to remove, pass on, or set about proceeding in the journey:" that is, to go from this life of toil and wretchedness to the blessed rest of heaven.

When Camerarius thought of taking a final leave of him on the sixteenth, he said, "My dear Doctor Joachim, we have been joined in the bond of friendship forty years, a friendship mutually sincere and affectionate. We have been helpers of each other with disinterested kindness in our respective stations and employments as teachers of youth, and I trust our labours have been useful; and though it be the will of God that I die, our friendship shall be perpetuated and cultivated in another world."

(n) Afferebatur etiam ei vinum rubrum Renanum quod vulgò à similitudine coloris, quam habet cum pede anserino cognominatur, et Dominus Philippus duplicato verbo Græco per jocum χηρόπαδα appellare solebat, hoc tum suavius utebatur et sibi sapere dicebat atque laudabat etiam admodum. Etsi autem hilarem se exhibebat et cum amicis presentibus colloquia habebat suavia, languor tamen magnus erat vel imbecillitas potius non parva, quæ penè in momenta augesebat.
Brevis Narratio.

Camerarius however determined to remain a little longer with his departing friend, and accordingly disregarded, during this interesting interval, the claims both of his public and private affairs. Melancthon continued to manifest great cheerfulness, but if it were at any time disturbed, his distress appeared to arise rather from the sympathy he felt with the suffering church, whenever its trials were reported to him, than from even the acute paroxysms of his disease. His friends had conversed with him on this subject during the evening repast, but he afterwards enjoyed a calm night. In his sleep he said he had dreamt of the words of Paul, which were forcibly impressed upon his mind, and afforded him much consolation, "If God be for us who can be against us?"

Early in the morning of the seventeenth Camerarius took his final leave. Melancthon had finished some letters to the Duke of Prussia and to several friends, which he had been preparing during the whole of his illness, and expressed his intention of writing more but for the interdiction of his Physician. When Camerarius bid him farewell—with a last and affectionate benediction, he replied, “ Jesus Christ, the Son of God, who sitteth at the right hand of the Father, and giveth gifts to men, preserve you and yours and all of us!”

Soon afterwards, having received information that the Roman Pontiff was meditating a general Council, he said he would rather die than attend it, for it was easy to foresee both the dissensions it would occasion, and the inutility of its meeting. Feeling the pressure of increasing pain, and infirmity, he said, “ O Lord make an end.”

On the eighteenth his bed was removed, by his own desire, into the library, which he had continually frequented during his illness, upon which occasion he said with great cheerfulness, as he was placed upon it, “ This may be called, I think, my travelling couch—if (alluding to the criticism before mentioned) I should remove in it.” While several friends were standing about his bed, he said, “ By the blessing of God I have now no particular domestic anxieties, for with respect to my grandchildren, whom I tenderly love and who are now before my eyes, I am comforted to think they are in the hands of pious and beloved parents, who will be solicitous for their welfare, as much as I could ever be: but I feel for the state of public affairs, especially for the church of Christ in this cavilling and wicked age. Through the goodness of God however our doctrine is made public." A little afterwards he addressed some present, " God bestows talents on our youth; do you see that they use them aright." In the course of the same day, seeing one of his grandchildren near him, " Dear child," said he, " I have loved you most affectionately: see that you reverence your parents, and always endeavour to please them, and fear God, who will never forsake you. I pray you may share his constant regard and benediction." He spoke in similar terms of tenderness and piety to all the younger branches of his family, who were deeply sensible of his approaching departure.

On the same day, after discoursing with his son-in-law upon all his private affairs, and having in vain searched for the Will he had formerly written, containing an explanation of some of the principal articles of his faith, which he was desirous of transmitting to posterity, he attempted to compose another, which increasing weakness would not allow him to finish. It began thus: " In the year 1560, on the eighteenth day of April, I write this Will briefly, according to the best of those remaining abilities which God vouchsafes me in my present illness. I have twice before written the confession of my faith, and gratitude to God and our Lord Jesus Christ, but these papers are missing; nevertheless I wish my confession to be considered an answer to whatever relates to the Bavarian articles, in opposition to the errors of the Papists, the Anabaptists, the followers of Flacius and others.”

After this he conferred with his son-in-law upon a diversity of subjects relative to the interests of the University, and expressed his wish that Peucer might be his successor in that institution.

Letters having been transmitted to him from Frankfort relative to the persecutions which at this period raged in France, he declared “that his bodily disease was not comparable to the grief of his mind, on account of the miseries which the church of Christ suffered.”

The nineteenth of April was the last day of his mortal existence. After the usual medical inquiries of the morning, he adverted again to the calamitous state of the church of Christ, but intimated his hope that the genuine doctrine of the gospel would ultimately prevail, exclaiming, “If God be for us who can be against us.” After this he presented fervent supplications to heaven, mingled with groanings, for the welfare of the church. In the intervals of sleep he conversed principally upon this subject with several of his visiting friends, amongst whom were the Pastor and other officers of the church, and the Professors of the University.

Soon after eight in the morning, awaking from a tranquil sleep, he distinctly, though with a feeble voice, repeated a form of prayer which he had written for his own daily use, and which was as follows:

“ Almighty, omnipotent, ever-living and true God, Creator of heaven and earth and men, together with thy co-eternal Son our Lord Jesus Christ, who was crucified for us and rose again, and thy Holy, true, living and pure Spirit; who art wise, good, faithful, merciful, just, the dispenser of life and of truth, independent, holy—and our Redeemer; who hast said thou willest not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should return unto thee and live—and hast promised, ‘ Call upon me in the day of trouble, and I will hear thee.’” I confess myself before thy footstool a most miserable sinner and offender against thee in a great variety of respects, on which account I mourn with my very heart and implore thy mercy for the sake of Jesus Christ our Lord, who was crucified and rose again, seeking the remission of all my sins and justification before thee by and through thy son Jesus Christ, thy eternal word, and image, wonderful and inexpressible in counsel, infinite in wisdom and goodness; and that thou wouldst sanctify me by thy true, living, pure, and Holy Spirit. May I truly acknowledge and firmly believe in thee, obey thee, give thanks to thee, fear thee, invoke thee, serve thee, and through grace be admitted to thy presence in eternity, the almighty and only true God, Creator of heaven and earth and men, the everlasting Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the presence of Jesus Christ thy Son, thy eternal word and image, and the Holy, true, living and pure Spirit, the Comforter. In thee have I hoped, O Lord: let me never be confounded: in thy righteousness deliver me. Make me righteous, and bring me unto life eternal: thou hast redeemed me, O Lord God of truth. Keep and overrule our churches, our government, and this Academy, and bestow upon us a salutary peace and government. Rule and protect our princes. Cherish thy church, gather and preserve it in these provinces, sanctify and unite thy people by thy Holy Spirit, that we may be one in thee, in the true knowledge and worship of thy Son Jesus Christ, by and through him thy eternal Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, who was crucified for us and raised again. Amen.

“ Almighty and eternal Lord Jesus Christ, the son of God, who art the eternal word and Image of the eternal Father, our Mediator and Intercessor, crucified for us and raised again, I give thee most hearty thanks that thou didst assume humanity, and art become my Redeemer, and having suffered and risen again in human nature, dost intercede on my behalf. I beseech thee regard and have mercy on me, for I am poor and defenceless. By thy Holy Spirit increase the light of faith in me, and, weak as I am, sustain, rule, protect and save me. In thee, O Lord, have I hoped, let me never be confounded.

“Almighty and Holy Spirit, the Comforter, pure, living, true—illuminate, govern, sanctify me, and confirm my heart and mind, in the faith, and in all genuine consolation; preserve and rule over me, that, dwelling in the house of the Lord all the days of my life to behold the beauty of the Lord, I may be and remain for ever in the temple of God, and praise him with a joyful spirit, and in union with all the heavenly church. Amen.”

An interval of repose having elapsed after repeating this prayer, he lifted up his eyes to heaven, and turning to his son-in-law said, “I have been in the power of death, but the Lord has graciously delivered me.” This was supposed to refer to some deep conflicts of mind, as he repeated the expression to others. When some of the bystanders said, “There is now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus,” he soon added, “Christ is made to us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption.” “Let him that glorieth glory in the Lord;” and often repeated, "Lord have mercy upon me." After this he took a little refreshment for the last time, and though he attempted to proceed with the testamentary paper he had begun the preceding day, he soon found it impossible to support such an effort, but signified his acquiescence in the divine disposal.

The coldness of death was now creeping over him, but his mental faculties continued unimpaired to the very last breath of mortal existence. (o) Having expressed a wish to hear some passages from the Old and New Testaments, his ministerial attendants read the twenty-fourth, twenty-fifth and twenty-sixth Psalms, the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, the seventh chapter of John, the fifth of the Romans and many other passages. The declaration of John respecting the Son of God, he said was perpetually in his mind, "the world knew him not..... but as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God even to them that believe on his name."

In addition to the passages of Scripture already mentioned, he frequently solaced himself with the following, "God so loved the world that he sent his only begotten Son into the world, that whosoever believeth on him might not perish but have everlasting life ;” “ Whoso seeth the Son and believeth on him hath eternal life ;” “ Being justified by faith we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ ;” and expressed the great consolation they afforded his mind. He earnestly exhorted his son-in-law to the study of peace, and whenever the prevailing religious contentions were mentioned, he would continually reply in the language of the son of Jesse, “ Let them curse, but bless thou,” and “ my soul hath dwelt with him that hateth peace. I am for peace, but when I speak they are for war.”—

(o) "Mens autem constabat integerrima et sincerissima usque ad extremum vitæ halitum." Brevis Narratio.

In the afternoon another paper was written to the students by the Professors, excusing their non-attendance to the usual duties of the day on account of Melancthon’s dangerous situation, with which they deeply sympathized, and entreating their united prayers during the usual hours of study on his behalf; for they considered it impossible he should be able long to struggle with his disease unless nature were divinely assisted and supported. (p) It may easily be believed that this intimation made a powerful impression throughout the University, and that all the passages leading to the house of this beloved tutor became crowded with anxious inquirers.

(p) “ Forma scripti hæc est—Charissimi auditores in quâ sollicitudine mærore, et metu versemur propter ægritudinem Reverendi Præceptoris et Patris nostri Domini Philippi non ignoratis et haud dubiè nobiscum seriò adficimini. Patienter etiam feretis, operas lectionum hoc pomeridiano tempore à nobis omitti. Significare autem nobis hoc ideo volumus ut sciretis morbum ita intendi ut nisi Deus suâ potentiâ naturam

Upon being asked by his son-in-law if he would have any thing else, he replied in these emphatic words, “ALIUD NIHIL—NISI CÆLUM.” i. e. NOTHING ELSE—BUT HEAVEN! and desired that he might not be any further interrupted. Soon afterwards he made a similar request, entreating those around him who were endeavouring with officious kindness to adjust his clothes, “not to disturb his delightful repose.” After some time his friends united with the minister present in solemn prayer, and several passages of Scripture in which he was known always to have expressed peculiar pleasure were read, such as “Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father’s house are many mansions.” “My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me;” particularly the fifth of juverit et sustentaverit, dominum Præceptorem vim morbi tolerare diu non valiturum. Hortamur autem vos ut nobiscum Deum ardentem invocetis ut miseram ecclesiam et in eâ juventutem clementer respiciat et ne ingratitudinem nostram hoc modò puniat, ut hunc fidelem studiorum gubernatorem nobis adhuc quidem eripiat. His precibus hoc vacuum tempus obsecro tribuite potius quàm aliis studiis et vos, Ecclesiam et valitudinem præceptoris nostri Deo diligenter commendate.”

the Romans and the triumphant close of the eighth chapter, commencing "If God be for us who can be against us." Many other parts of Scripture were recited, and the last word he uttered was the German particle of affirmation Ia, in reply to Vitus Winshemius, who had inquired if he understood him while reading. The last motion which his friends who surrounded him to the number of at least twenty, (q) could discern, was a slight motion of the countenance which was peculiar to him when deeply affected with religious joy!—"Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace!"

At length, "in the midst of solemn vows and supplications," at a quarter of an hour before seven o'clock in the evening, of the nineteenth of April, one thousand five hundred and sixty, at the age of sixty-three years two months and three days, he gently breathed his last. (r) No distractions of mind, no foreboding terrors of conscience agitated this attractive scene. His chamber was "privileged beyond the common walks of virtuous life—quite in the verge of heaven"

(q) "Item autem hoc (Ia) expressè et disertè enunciabat ut exaudiretur à circumstantibus omnibus qui fuerunt numero ad minimum viginti." Brevis Narratio.

(r) MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum. Art. Melancthon. BREVIS NARRATIO.

—and he expired like a wave scarcely curling to the evening zephyr of an unclouded summer sky, and gently rippling to the shore. It was a “DEPARTURE”—a “SLEEP”—“the earthly house of this tabernacle was DISSOLVED!”(s)

Surely then, “such a pious and tranquil removal from a toilsome and afflictive life ought to be a subject of joy rather than of lamentation, and each of us should entreat God that in the possession of a similar peace of conscience, firm faith, acknowledgment of the truth and ardent devotion of mind, he would conduct us from our present imprisonment to his eternal presence.”(t)

Information of this event was immediately transmitted to the Elector, and means were adopted to bury him with suitable circumstances of respect. To gratify the anxious crowds who were desirous of seeing the body of this venerable person, the public were permitted for a day and a half after his decease to inspect his mortal remains; and of the hundreds who availed themselves of the opportunity, none could resist bestowing an abundant tribute of tears upon his beloved memory. Strangers who had never seen him while living pressed to take a view of the yet undeparted symmetry of his amiable countenance, and all who came were desirous of obtaining a pen, a piece of paper however small on which he had written, or in short any thing he had used however insignificant in itself, which was scattered on the floor of the library.^(u)

(s) I COR. v. 1.

(t) SCRIPTUM publicè propos. in Acad. Wit. quo scholastici convocati sunt ad deduc. funus Dom. Phil. Melancthonis, 21 Aprilis: Geo. Majore Vice Rect.

His remains were placed in a leaden coffin and deposited close to the body of Martin Luther—"lovely and pleasant in their lives and in their death they were not divided." A long Latin inscription was written on the coffin, containing a chronological notice of the principal circumstances of his life. Some of the professors in the University attended in funeral robes to convey the body to the parochial church, where it was placed before the altar, and after the usual ceremonies and psalms, Doctor Paul Eberus, pastor of the church at Wittemberg delivered a funeral discourse; after which the body being removed into the centre of the church, Doctor Vitus Winshemius pronounced an oration in Latin. The crowd of students, citizens, strangers, and persons of every class attracted together to witness these solemnities, was never exceeded on any occasion within the memory of the spectators. Among the rest were several of the professors from the University of Leipsic, and many of the nobility, pastors of churches and others, from a large vicinity. (x)

(u) BREVIS NARRATIO.

From a considerable collection of Greek and Latin eulogies and epitaphs, with which he used to predict that the poets would honour his memory, (y) the following by Theodore Beza is selected as a sufficient and very beautiful specimen:—

Et tu igitur tandem tumuli sub mole repostus

Die ô Philippe, nunc jaces.

Et quam invidisti vivus tibi tute quietem,

Cunctis quietem dum paras,

Ipse tibi cura et sancti peperere labores,

Carum ô bonis cunctis caput!

At tu funde rosas, funde isti lilia tellus,

Ut lilia inter et rosas,

Quo nil candidius fuit et nil suavius unquam,

Recubet Melancthon molliter.

Et gravis huic ut sis, caveas juvenisve senexve,

Qui nemini vixit gravis.

Here then MELANCTHON lies thy honour'd head

Low in the grave amongst the mould'ring dead!

In life 'twas thine to make all others blest

But to thyself denying peace and rest;

(x) BREVIS NARRATIO et SCRIP. pub. propos. in Acad. Wit. quo. Schol. convocat. ad deducend. funus Melancthonis.

(y) “ Quemadmodum autem ipse vivens sæpe dixerat, se mortuum loborem relicturum poetis, amicis autem ἀγῶνα ἐπιτάφιον, ita et factum.” MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum, p. 354.

Thine was the holy toil, the anxious tear,
 Dear Philip—to the good for ever dear!—
 O earth! let lilies here profusely spring,
 And roses all around their odours fling!
 For rose and lily each their glories blend,
 The sweet, the fair, in our departed friend!
 Soft let him sleep and none disturb his rest,
 None he disturb'd while living—none oppress!

Some appropriate lines have been kindly communicated by a poetical friend.

ODE

On the Death of Philip Melancthon.

Oh! who would envy those who die
 Victims on ambition's shrine!
 Though idiot man may rank them high,
 And to the slain in victory,
 Pay honours half divine;
 To feel this heaving fluttering breath,
 Still'd by the lightest touch of death,
 The happier lot be mine!
 I would not, that the murdering brand,
 Were the last weapon in my hand.
 He, of whom these pages tell,
 He, a soldier too—of truth,
 He, a Hero from his youth;
 How delightfully he fell!
 Not in the crash, and din, and flood,
 Of execrations, groans, and blood,
 Rivetting fetters on the good;—
 But happily and well.

No song of triumph sounds his fall,
 No march of death salutes his bier,
 But tribute sweeter far than all,
 The sainted sigh, the orphan tear!
 Yet mourn not, ye who stand around,
 Bid not time less swiftly roll,
 What though shade the prospect bound;
 He a brighter world has found,
 Death is the birth-day of the soul.

Witness! (for ye saw him die)
 Heard you complaint, or groan, or sigh?—
 Or if one sigh breath'd o'er his breast,—
 As gentle airs when days of summer close,
 Breathe, over wearied nature still repose,
 And lull a lovely evening to rest:
 It whisper'd,—“ All within is peace,
 The storm is o'er, and troubles cease.”

His sun went down in cloudless skies,
 Assur'd upon the morn to rise,
 In lovelier array,
 But not like earth's declining light
 To vanish back again to night:
 The zenith where he now shall glow
 No bound, no setting beam can know.
 Without, or cloud or shade of woe,
 Is that eternal day.

History will not write his name,
 Upon the crimson roll of fame;
 But religion, meeker maid,
 Mark him in her tablet fair;
 And, when million names shall fade,
 He will stand recorded there!

Here our labours are nearly closed. The reader it is hoped will accept of this volume as a faithful portrait of Melancthon's character; but before it is parted with, it seems due to the distinguished individual whose likeness we have endeavoured to impress upon these pages, to relate two circumstances as a finish to the picture: the one is illustrative of his fame, the other of his piety.

When Sabinus his son-in-law visited Italy, he carried a letter of introduction from Melancthon to the celebrated Cardinal Bembo; the consequence of which was an invitation to dinner. Among a variety of questions, the three following are particularly mentioned. The Cardinal inquired "what was Melancthon's salary—what the number of his hearers—and what his opinion respecting the resurrection and a future state?"—To the first question Sabinus replied, that "his salary was about three hundred florins," upon which the Cardinal exclaimed, "Ungrateful Germany! to estimate at no higher a price so many and such labours of so great a man!" His reply to the second question was, "that he had usually fifteen hundred hearers." To this the Cardinal answered, "I cannot believe it, because I do not know a University in Europe excepting that of Paris in which one professor has so many scholars." To the third question Sabinus replied, "that Melancthon's works were a sufficient proof of his belief in both those articles.” The Cardinal said “I should think him a wiser man if he did not believe them.”(z)

When in consequence of the tyranny of Queen Mary thousands of Puritans fled from England into Germany, Switzerland and France, the Lutherans reproached them as the Devil's Martyrs. Melancthon contended strenuously against these calumniators, and expressed his abhorrence at such language being applied to a class of men like Latimer and others with whom he was well acquainted.(a)

It is painful to reflect that an event which usually checks the hostile feelings of the most determined enemies, did not however subdue the animosity of those of Melancthon. A persecuting demon seemed to have taken an entire possession of them, for even after his decease they shot the envenomed arrows of malignity at his character and borrowed the vociferous tongue of calumny to blast his fame: but in vain to him—he had reached that peaceful asylum so long anticipated, where “the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest!”

(z) MEL. ADAM. Vit. Germ. Theologorum.

(a) MELANCTH. Ep, Lib. IV. p. 959. Lib. II. p. 387.

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX.

No. I.

(PAGE 3.)

Biographical Notices of Peter Waldus or Waldo, John Wickliffe, John Huss and Jerome of Prague,

PETER WALDUS or WALDO, of Lyons, was the founder of the sect of the Waldenses, who inhabited the vallies of Piedmont. His own convictions of the truth originated from his having employed a priest, Stephanus de Evisa, about the year 1160, to translate the four Gospels from Latin into French, with other books of Scripture, and the most remarkable sentences of the ancient Doctors. He soon perceived the essential difference between the religion of the Romish church and the principles of the gospel. Abandoning his mercantile profession, and uniting with other pious men who adopted his sentiments, he became a public preacher in the year 1180. The Archbishop and other ecclesiastics vigorously, but unsuccessfully, opposed him in the exercise of his ministry. The purity of his faith, and that of his followers, the unambitious principle that evidently actuated them, and the innocence of their whole character, excited a very general attention, and religious assemblies were at length formed in France, Lombardy, and different parts of Europe; and though pursued by fire and sword, they could never be exterminated.

JOHN WICLIFFE, the morning star of the Reformation, was born near Richmond in Yorkshire, in the year 1324. He was educated at Oxford, and having been disgusted with the enormities of the see of Rome in general, and its conduct to himself in particular, he at length gave public Lectures, in which he exposed the abuses of the Mendicant orders. He issued a defence of Edward III. against the Pope, which introduced him to Court. In 1377 Papal bulls were issued, requiring the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London to secure and imprison him as a heretic, and the king and the University of Oxford to deliver him up. Wickliffe however, protected by the government, and by the citizens of London, eluded the persecution. He published a book on the "Truth of the Scriptures," and what he termed "Sixteen Conclusions," directed against the Papacy. But his principal work was a literal translation of the Bible from the Latin Vulgate. This great English Reformer died in December, 1384.

JOHN HUSS, an illustrious martyr to the cause of truth, was born in Bohemia in the year 1376, and was educated at Prague, where he became Professor of Divinity in the University, and ordinary Pastor in the church of that city. He exclaimed with vehemence against the vices of the clergy, and from the year 1408 exerted his utmost endeavours to withdraw the University of Prague from the jurisdiction of Gregory XII. He recommended in the most public manner the writings of Wickliffe, which produced an accusation against him in the year 1410, before the tribunal of John XXIII. by whom he was expelled from the communion of the church. He was burnt alive for his heresy by a decree of the Council of Constance, the 6th of July, 1416, in violation of a safe-conduct which had been granted him by the Emperor Sigismund; “which dreadful punishment,” says Mosheim, “he endured with unparalleled magnanimity and resignation, expressing in his last moments the noblest feelings of love to God, and the most triumphant hope of the accomplishment of those transporting promises with which the gospel arms the true Christian at the approach of eternity.”

JEROME of PRAGUE was the intimate friend of HUSS, and accompanied him to the Council of Constance, with the design of advocating his cause. The fear of a cruel death at first seemed to shake his constancy, but he finally adhered to his principles in the flames, to which he was consigned on the thirtieth of May, 1416.

No. II.

(PAGE 7.)

This curious circumstance is related by Camerarius in the following words:—“Harum igitur artium ille peritus et iis virtutibus quas commemoravimus ornatus, in noticiam pervenit maximorum et potentissimorum Principum, iisque carus fuit; in quibus nominasse satis sit et Regem optimum et bellatorem Invictissimum Divum Maximilianum Imperatoris Frederichi filium. Quem Georgius aliquando cum glorioso provocatore Italo, cui nomen Claudio Bataro, certamine singulari congressurum ita instruxit et sic arma ipsius machinando paravit, ut fortissimo Viro Maximiliano victoria certa facilè etiam et celeriter contingeret. Claudius enim non diu repugnans, cum, quantò omnibus rebus esset inferior sentiens ad pedes Maximiliani se adjecisset, ita in potestatem ejus se tradidit.”

 CAM. Vit. Mel. p. 3.

No. III.

(PAGE 20.)

PROLOGUS IN ANDRIAM TERENTII.

VESTRÆ periculum fecimus patientiæ
 Cum nuper in scenâ exhibuimus militem, Animosque nobis addidit vester favor
 Ut non patiamur scenam consulescere
 Sed ne mirere, Quid pompæ Theologicæ
 Cum comicis jocis, meræ sunt fabulæ
 In pulpitis quas agebant hodie Theologi
 Et chirothecæ et annuli sunt fabulæ
 Nomen Magistri Nostri planæ fabulæ
 Postremo qui condixit operam hujus gregis
 Theologus est suoque jussit fabulam

Prolixior ut risus foret præscripto agi
 Ut ut placebimus imputari vult sibi
 Affertur huc Terentiana fabula
 Cui author ipse nomen fecit Andriam Favete bellus in medium prodit senex.

ALIUS IN EANDEM.

Comica debetur merito tibi palma Terenti
 Tanta etiam parvis gratia rebus inest.

PROLOGUS IN EUNUCHUM.

Salvere jubeo spectatores optimos
 Qui scenæ ornandæ confluxere gratia
 Favore nostra studia ut excitent suo Artesque honestas et benigne provehant
 Authoritateque ut tueantur hunc gregem
 Qui scenicos ludos industria sua
 Instruxit hâc in urbe primus, ut jocis
 Salibusque personent hæc pulpita atticis
 Et barbaros plorare jussit, fabulas
 Efferre qui vetabant in proscenium
 Quæ cultiores juvenum mores redderent
 Terentianum agemus Eunuchum modò
 Quæ fabulas latinas vincit cæteras
 Sermonis elegantia et facetiis
 Vel ipse quas Momus miretur ac probet
 Illoque sentiat tinctas sale, quo satam
 Amorum et illecebrarum matrem omnium
 Venerem ferunt. Sed corrugare tetricos Quosdam videtis nares, immodestiæ
 Hi nos accusant in theatrum quod jocos
 Proferre liberiores paulo a usi sumus.
 Moresque criminantur viciari bonos

Parum severis dictis atque lusibus;
 Sed ô censores asperos et pergraves
 Qui quod reprehendunt in theatro ludunt domi
 Et curios simulant vivunt bacchanalia
 Ludunt poetæ, at lusus illi seria
 Ducunt, simulque morum tradunt optima
 Vitæ præcepta, ut nihil melius Solon
 Aut sanctius tabulis inscripserit æneis
 Sed asperam tamen virtutem condiunt
 Jucundioribus illecebris, ut soient
 Medici daturi pueris tetra absynthia
 Cum melle dulci et saccaro irritant gulam
 Facessant ergo iniqui iudices hinc procul
 Ut æquioribus spectandi dent locum
 Nos publici nostrique causa commodi
 Terentianam agemus Eunuchum modo
 Qua barbaram Thrasonis arrogantiam
 Fastumque inanem irridet, hic est cernere
 Perinde ut in speculo ardelionauum imaginem
 Qui caudices fungique cum meri sient
 Primas tamen sibi rerum ubique vendicant
 Proventus hujus generis est uberrimus
 Hoc seculo, cum se titulo sapientiæ
 Musarum, ubique venditant, hostes feri
 Prophana divinaque miscent omnia
 Vos ergo favete spectatores optimi
 Adfertur utilis et jucunda fabula.

PROLOGUS IN PHORMIONEM

Primum opto vobis spectatores candidi
 Salutem, et à vobis vicissim mihi expeto
 Ut auribus æquis, cur ego huc processerim
 Noscatis, et in humanitate spes mihi

Vestra est benigne facturos quod postulo
 Plerique prologi vestrâ abutuntur patientiâ
 Qui cum æmulis rixantur in prosceniis
 Ubi blanditiis decet emereri gratiam
 Non odiose latrare jocosque comicos
 Ab amarulentis satyris auspicarier
 Si quis caninam meditatur facundiam
 Et dicere ac audire vult convicia
 Concedat hinc ad Cynicos, si libeat novos
 Næ is bene lauteque accipietur arbitror
 Ego huc venio indicem ut coronæ, fabulam
 Adferri bellulam lepidamque Terentii
 A pueris aliquot Phormionem, nunc peto
 Ut qui studiis favent, bonisque literis
 Faveant et actioni puerorum rudi.

No. IV.

(PAGE 35.)

ERASMUS.

This passage has been somewhat altered from the first edition having been considered by some of the author's literary friends too severe. It is not indeed pleasant to impute bad motives without very satisfactory evidence, and yet his life as detailed by Jortin, seemed to justify the statement which at first appeared. Still as the admirable pen of Erasmus rendered essential service both to the cause of religion, and learning, I am not desirous of giving undue prominency to his defects.

This eminent man was born at Rotterdam in 1467, and always called himself Roterodamus: his native city expressed her acknowledgment by inscriptions, medals, and a whole-length statue in the market place. He lost his father at the early age of fourteen, and being committed to the care of guardians, was compelled by them to enter a monastery, but afterwards obtained a dispensation from his vows. He took his Doctor's degree at Turin in 1508, and sometime afterwards became tutor to Alexander, archbishop of St. Andrews, natural son of James, king of Scotland. He was the great restorer of the Latin language; but for a detail of his life and labors the reader must consult Jortin. He died at Basil in 1536; and his works were published at Leyden in 1706, under the care of M. Le Clerc in 10 vols. folio. W. Latimer said of him, "he was a man of more than virgini modesty, under which was veiled the greatest worth;" he also calls him, vere theologus, integritate vitæ conspicuus.

"He hath drawn his own character," says Jortin, "in his letter, from which we have principally collected this account of his life; and hath performed it in so masterly a manner, that we could not have wished for better materials to work upon. He may be justly censured for his weakness in flattering a party, whose sentiments and conduct he in many things disapproved: and in finding fault with those, whom on the whole he resembled much more than he did their adversaries.

But if he deserved some blame on this account, they who compelled him to dissemble in this manner, who hated the very name of reformation, and who treated as vile heretics all those who dared even to wish for some amendment, were beyond measure more blameable. There was the same difference between them and him as between a tyrant and his poor subjects, who are obliged to humour him that they may save their lives and effects, and to do what they would never have done if violence had not constrained them. If Erasmus wanted courage, they who took advantage of his infirmity were far more deficient in honesty and piety.”

No. V.

(PAGE 159.)

GERSON.

JOHN GERSON or JARSON, sometimes also called Charlier, was born at Gerson, a village in Champagne near Rheims in 1363, and received his education in Paris. In 1392, he took his Doctor's degree, and three years afterwards succeeded Peter d'Ailly as chancellor and canon of the church of Paris. He was one of the deputies sent in 1406, to Gregory and Benedict, to induce them to restore union to the church, and contributed materially at the council of Pisa to the election of Alexander V. His declaration against the murder of the Duke of Orleans in 1408, placed him in circumstances of imminent danger and involved him in considerable loss; after the storm had abated he procured from the faculty of Theology in Paris, a censure of the work of Petit who had written to vindicate the assassination; and at the council of Constance where he appeared as ambassador from the king of France, and deputy, from the University of Paris and the province of Sens, he zealously supported the condemnation. In that assembly he was regarded as the most able speaker of all the divines. His ardor however against the murder procured him the indignation of its prime instigator, the Duke of Burgundy, in consequence of which he was obliged for some time to remain in Germany in disguise. At length he took up his residence with his brother, Prior of the Celestines, at Lyons, where he lived many years, and kept a school for youth. At the age of sixty-six, in the year 1429, he died at Lyons, and was interred in the church of St. Lawrence. Gerson vigorously supported the authority of General Councils above that of Popes; he defended the rights of the secular clergy against the pretensions of the regulars; opposed all superstitious notions, and was a man both of a liberal mind and extensive capacity.

Du Pin says, "From the time of St. Bernard the church never had an author of greater reputation, more profound knowledge, and more solid piety than Gerson. His style is harsh and careless; yet he is methodical, reasons well, and exhausts his subjects. He founds his conclusions upon principles drawn from Scripture or natural reason. He defends the truth upon all occasions with an admirable and undaunted courage. He suffered a cruel persecution for a righteous cause, and died in exile for maintaining it with vigor. His works, it must be confessed, are not all of equal strength; some of them are inconsiderable; and he does not always take the right side of the question he handles. Yet many of his books are excellent, and divines cannot profit more than by reading them diligently."

The most complete edition of his works is that of Du Pin, printed at Amsterdam, with the title Antwerp in 1706, in five volumes, folio.

His epitaph is as follows :

Magnum parva tenet virtutibus urna Johannem
 Præcelsum meritis, Gerson, cognomine dictum
 Parisiis sacræ Professor Theologiæ Claruit, Ecclesiæ qui Cancellarius anno Milleno Domini centum quater atque vigeno Nono, luce petit superos Julii duodena.

No. VI.

(PAGE 175.)

CONTENTS

OF THE

LOCI COMMUNES THEOLOGICI ;

OR,

THEOLOGICAL COMMON PLACES.

- I. OF God.
- II. On the Unity of God.
- III. The Three Persons of the Deity.
- IV. Of the Son.
- V. Testimonies concerning Christ.
- VI. Concerning the Invocation of Christ.
- VII. Testimonies concerning Christ from the Old Testament.

- VIII. Of the Holy Spirit.
- IX. The Creation.
- X. The Cause and Consequence of Sin.
- XI. Free Will.
- XII. Of Sin.
- XIII. Of Original Sin.
- XIV. Of actual Transgressions.
- XV. Of the Divine Law.
- XVI. Of the different kind of Laws.
- XVII. An Exposition of the Ten Commandments.
- XVIII. The Decalogue.
- XIX. Of the Law of Nature.
- XX. Of the Use of the Law.
- XXI. Of the Difference between Counsels and Commandments.
- XXII. Of Revenge.
- XXIII. Of Purity.
- XXIV. Of Chastity.
- XXV. Of the Gospel.
- XXVI. Of Grace and Justification.
- XXVII. Of Faith.
- XXVIII. Of Grace.
- XXIX. Of Good Works.
- XXX. Of the Old and New Testaments.
- XXXI. Of the Difference between mortal and venial Transgressions.
- XXXII. Of the Church.
- XXXIII. Of the Sacraments.
- XXXIV. Of Confirmation.
- XXXV. Of Unction.
- XXXVI. Of Baptism.
- XXXVII. Of the Lord's Supper.
- XXXVIII. Of Christian Sacrifices.
- XXXIX. Of Penitence.

- XL. Of Contrition.
 XLI. Of Confession.
 XLII. Of Satisfaction.
 XLIII. Of Predestination.
 XLIV. Of the Kingdom of Christ.
 XLV. Of the Resurrection of the Dead.
 XLVI. Of the Spirit and the Letter.
 XLVII. Of Afflictions and Consolations.
 XLVIII. Of Prayer.
 XLIX. Of Civil Magistrates.
 L. Of human Ceremonies in the Church.
 LI. Of Mortification.
 LII. Of Scandals.
 LIII. Of Christian Liberty.

No. VII.

(PAGE 201.)

SPALATINE.

IT is to be regretted that the records of Ecclesiastical history do not furnish a life of this valuable man. He wrote memoirs of FREDERIC under whom he acted at this stormy period, and seems to have been well qualified for the difficult situation he had to maintain.

No. VIII.

(PAGE 214.)

THE title of these volumes is—BIBLIA: das est: die gantze heilige Schrift: deutsch auff's new zuge richt.

D. MART: LUTHER.

Begnadet mit Kurfurstlicher zu Sachsen Freipeix gedrueckt zu Wittemberg Durch hanslufft, 1541.

Luther has written the following sentences with his own hand.

(In Vol. I.)

Martinus Luther, D.

1542.

Der Herr ist mein Hirte Mir wird nichts mangeln
Wer's glanben kunde der ware ein selig fett sicher Schaf dieses trewen Hirten der auch sein Leben hat fur solche Schafe gesetzt wehe dem schandlichen Verlaumder der solchem. Hirten und lieber will vom Wollfe geffessen sein zum ewigen Tode.

Martinus Luther, D.

1542.

Translation.

The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall want nothing.
Who could believe it! He would rest sound and secure, a sheep of the faithful Shepherd who giveth his life for his flock. Woe to the shameful calumniator who does not follow such a Shepherd, but rather suffers himself to be devoured by the wolf of eternal death.

Martin Luther, D. 1542.

(In Vol. II.)

Und ob ich wandern muste ym fins tern Thal furchte ich mich doch nicht, dem du bist bey mir.

Gottes Wort ist ein Licht; das ym finstern scheint und lertet Heller denn am Tage denn ym Tode verlischt nicht allein das Licht dieser Sonnen sondern auch der Vernunft: mit aller yhrer Weisheit du liebtest: denn mit aller trero das Wort Gottes ein ewige Sonne welche allein der Glaube sihet und folget bis yns ewige klare Leben.

(In Vol. II.)

Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me.

The word of God is a light that shines in darkness and is a clearer guide than the day itself, for in death not only the light of this sun but of reason also is extinguished with all her wisdom—still thou lovest with all thine heart the word of God, an eternal sun which is visible alone to faith, and follows it even into the bright and everlasting life.

Martin Luther, D. 1542.

The hand-writing of Melancthon occupies the fourth page. His words are Der Spruch des.

Prophetan Elias.

Sechs tusent jar bleibet dise welt darnach wirt sie verbrennen.

Zwei Tusent jar oed.

Zwei Tusent jar das gesetz Moisi.

Zwei Tusent jar die tag Messiah; und von wegen unsre sunden die viel und grosz sind werden die Tar davon abgehen, welche nicht erfullt werden.

Geschrieben Anno 1557 iar nach der giburt der Herrn Christ ausz der Tungfraw Maria.

Anno von Erschaffung der Welt. 5519. Ausz diser Zal ist zu versichern. das dise hochbejahrte Welt: nicht fern vom Ende ist. Der allmachtige Gottes Son Jesus Christus wolle sie velherrlichen nach sein. Armes Kräften gnediglich erhalten regiren bewaren und schutzen.

Script. manu Philippi, 1557. W.

(Literal Translation.)

The words of the Prophet Elias.

Six thousand years this world shall stand and after that be burnt.

Two thousand years void (or without the law).

Two thousand years the law of Moses.

Two thousand years the day of Messiah; but on account of our sins which are many and great, those years which are not yet fulfilled shall be shortened.

Written in the year 1557, after the birth of our Lord Christ, of the Virgin Mary—Year from the Creation of the world 5519; from this number we may be assured that this aged world is not far from its end.—May Jesus Christ the Son of Almighty God, graciously preserve, govern, keep, protect it by the power of his arm.

Written by the hand of Philip, 1557. W.

To what particular passage Melancthon refers in the above quotation I cannot discover, but he appears to have adopted it as the general division of his large historical work the CHRONICON. Thus he states it:—

TRADITIO DOMUS ELIÆ.

Sex millia annorum mundus et deinde conflatio.

Duo millia Inane.

Duo millia Lex.

Duo millia dies Messiae. Et propter peccata nostra, quæ multa et magna sunt, deerunt anni, qui deerunt.

No. IX.

(PAGE 406.)

TESTAMENTUM

PHIL. MELANCTHONIS.

(Ex PEZEL. Cons. Theol. P. I. p. 389 & 399.)

IN NOMINE DEI Patris et Filii et Spiritus Sancti. Apparet, initio præcipue condita esse testamenta propter hanc causam, ut patres relinquerent liberis certum testimonium suæ sententiæ de religione, quam volebant gravi autoritate quasi obsignatam propagari ad posteros. Item ut liberos ipsos ad eandem sententiam retinendam et conservandam obligarent, sicut exempla ostendunt in testamento Jacob et Davidis. Ideo et Christus suum quoddam testamentum hoc modo condidit. Et quia testamenta continbant explicatas, certas immutabilesque sententias de doctrinâ cœlesti, rerum magnitudo auxit testamentorum autoritatem. Quare et ego meorum liberorum et quorundam amicorum admonendorum causa, volui initio in Testamento, et meam confessionem recitare, et liberis meis præcipere pro officio Patris, ut in eâdem sententiâ constanter maneant. Primum autem ego gratias Deo Patri Domini nostri Jesu Christi pro nobis crucifixi, conditori omnium rerum, quod me vocavit ad pœnitentiam, et ad Evangelii agnitionem, ac oro, ut propter Filium suum, quem pro nobis voluit esse victimam, mihi condonet omnia peccata, me recipiat, justificet, exaudiat, et a morte aternâ liberet: sicut credo verè facturum esse. Nam ita jussit nos credere, et impietas est, pluris facere peccata nostra, quam mortem filii Dei. Hanc antefero meis peccatis. Rogo autem, ut hæc initia fidei in me Deus confirmet Spiritu suo Sancto, propter Filium Mediatorem. Excrutior equidem et meis peccatis, et scandalis aliorum, sed antefero mortem Filii Dei, ut gratia exuberet supra peccatum. Secundo affirmo me vere amplecti symbola, Apostolicum, et Nicænum, et de totâ doctrinâ Christianâ sentire, ut scripsi in Locis Communibus et Romanis (Comment. in Epist. ad Rom.) postremæ editionis, in quibus explicate de singulis articulis, sine ambiguitate conatus sum dicere quod sentio. De Cœnâ Domini amplector Formulam Concordiæ hic factam. Adjunxi me igitur nostris Ecclesiis, et has judico profiteri Catholicæ Ecclesiæ Christi doctrinam, et esse verè Christi Ecclesias; ac præcipio meis liberis, ut in nostris ecclesiis maneant, ac fugiant Papistarum Ecclesias et Conjunctionem. Nam Papistæ in multis articulis profitentur corruptissimam doctrinam: prorsus ignorant doctrinam de justitiâ fidei, et de remissione peccatorum: nihil tradunt de discrimine legis et Evangelii: de invocatione Dei habent ethnicas aut Pharisæicas opiniones. Ad hos errores addunt et alios multos, et manifestam idololatriam, in missis suis et cultu mortuorum hominum. Peto igitur a meis liberis, ut mihi propter mandatum Dei in hâc re obtemperent, nec se adjungant Papistis. Et quoniam video impendere ad posteros novas conturbationes dogmatum et Ecclesiæ ac fortassis existent Spiritus fanatici ac leves, qui labefactabunt articulos de Filio Dei, et de Spiritu Sancto, volo præmonitos meos, ut constanter retineant sententiam, quam profiteor in Locis cum Catholicâ Christi Ecclesiâ, ubi damno Samosatenum, Servetum et alios, dissentientes a symbolis receptis. Erant etiam fortassis novæ dogmatum conciliationes Sophisticæ post hanc ætatem, ubi restituentur veteres errores nonnihil fucati, et hæ conciliationes corrumpent doctrinæ puritatem, quæ nunc traditur. De his quoque præmoneo meos, ne Sophisticas conciliationes approbent. Sed hic eruditi hortandi sunt ut advigilent, ne specie pacis et publicæ tranquillitatis recipiant dogmatum confusionem, qualis in Sirmiensi Synodo facta fuit. Verè hoc possum affirmare me conatum esse, ut verè et propriè explicarem nostrarum Ecclesiarum doctrinam, ut juventus rectius intelligere nostras sententias posset et, ad posteritatem conservare. Hæc forma si prodest, ut judico, rogo Casparum Crucigerum et alios qui nos audiverunt, ut eam in scholis conservent. Scio quosdam aliquando suspicatos esse, me quædam moliri in gratiam adversariorum. Sed Deum testem facio, me adversariis non patrocinari voluisse, sed quæsisisse proprietatem in explicando, ut juventus has res rectius perciperet, sine ambiguitatibus, et quam difficile mihi fuerit, hunc ordinem et methodum in explicando reperire, multi norunt, qui sciunt, me formam in explicando sæpe mutasse; et constat Augustinianam formam non satis explicatam esse. Ideo affirmo, me bono studio hanc methodum instituisse, quæ extat in Romanis, et quidem cupio post me relinquere sententias certas sine ambiguitate; quia ambiguitas postea parit novas discordias. Nec meum consilium fuit, ullum novam opinionem serere, sed perspicuè et propriè exponere doctrinam Catholicam, quæ traditur in nostris Ecclesiis, quam quidem iudicio singulari Dei beneficio patefactam esse his postremis temporibus per D. D. Martinum Lutherum, ut Ecclesia repurgaretur, instauraretur, quæ alioqui funditus periisset. Ergo hanc lucem, quam diu possumus, conservemus. Ac precor Deum Patrem servatoris nostri Jesu Christi, conditiorem omnium rerum ut piorum studia adjuvet, et conservet aliquam Ecclesiam ac præsertim benedicat nostris Ecclesiis, quæ propter Evangelium sustinuerunt certamina diuturna.

Ago autem gratias Reverendo D. Doctori Martino Luthero, primum, quia ab ipso Evangelium didici; deinde pro singulari erga me benevolentia, quam quidem plurimis beneficiis declaravit, eumque volo a meis, non secus ac patrem, coli. Ego, quia vidi et comperi, præditum esse excellenti et heroicâ vi ingenii et multis magnis virtutibus, pietate ac doctrinâ præcipuâ semper eum magnifeci, dilexi et colendum esse sensi. Ago etiam gratias Illustrissimo Principi, Duci Saxonie Electori, Domino Johanni Frederico, cujus erga me fuit singularis clementia et liberalitas. Ac oro Deum, ut servet eum incolumem, defendat ac gubernet, ad suam et communem salutem Ecclesie et multarum gentium. Fuit mihi etiam pergrata benevolentia viri clarissimi Domini Cancellarii Pontani, quem et ipsum propter egregiam vim ingenii et virtutem dilexi, eique pro omnibus beneficiis gratias ago. Ago gratias et cæteris bonis viris, qui constantiam in amicitia nostrâ perpetuam præstiterunt, Georgio fratri meo, Joachimo Camerario, Domino Cancellario Francisco (id est, Burcardo), D. Jonæ, D. Pomerano, Crucigero, D. Augustino (Schurfio) D. Milichio, Paulo Ebero, Vito. Ac precor Deum, ut eos servet. Nec judico extingui has amicitias mea morte: sed sentio nos paulo post in cœlesti vitâ conventuros esse, ubi verius frui licebit amicitîâ nostrâ, et erit multo dulcior familiaritas. Precor etiam omnes, ut mihi amanter dent veniam erratorum meorum, si quâ in re quemquam offendi. Certe petulanter non volui offendere. Etiam omnibus in Academiâ Doctoribus, ac collegis meis gratias ago, quod me amanter multis officiis in Republicâ, et privatim adjuverunt.

THE END.

4/100

